

U. S. WITHOUT STANDARD FOR PURE WHISKY

Repeal Will Find Brands of Varying Content and Quality.

By Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance
WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—Until the new proposed pure foods and drugs bill is enacted there are no government standards for beverage whisky, and if prohibition is repealed this year the spirits then available for consumption will vary in content and quality."

Whisky, it appears, is manufactured by several processes, some quick, others slow; and not all the resulting beverages are what is known medically as "spirituous fruit."

Definition of this polysyllabic Latin name is included among government standards. It is medicinal whisky, defined as an "alcoholic liquid obtained by the distillation of the fermented mash of wholly or partly malted cereal grains, and containing not less than 47 per cent of (alcohol). It must have been stored in charred wood containers for a period of not less than four years."

Difficult to Obtain

This is the "bottled-in-bond aged-in-the-wood" that has been practically unobtainable since prohibition, except on prescription.

And when repeal is voted, at least for a time, this type of whisky probably will continue to be difficult to obtain, although a beverage of practically the same chemical make-up, the same taste and aroma will be obtainable as whisky.

Most of the post-prohibition liquor apparently will be blended or rectified whisky, about which long and elaborate controversies have been waged.

Issues Printed Decision

President Theodore Roosevelt had a hand in one controversy, President Taft and Dr. Harvey Wiley, then head of the pure foods and drugs administration, were involved also. It was back in December, 1909, that President Taft issued a nine-page printed decision answering the question: "What is the meaning of the term whisky under the pure food act, and the proper regulation for branding various kinds of whisky under the internal revenue act?" Not a little of the lore of this ancient beverage is included.

Derived From Irish

Whisky, President Taft pointed out, is a term derived from the Irish word "Usquebaugh," and for "more than a century has been used in Ireland, Scotland, England and in this country to mean ardent spirits distilled from grain reduced to potable strength."

The pure food and drugs bureau has no fixed standards for beverage whisky. It is unable to say whether rectified and blended whiskies—the sort America is likely to see most often for at least a time after repeal—are any better or any worse than straight aged-in-the-wood whisky.

BRANDS DREAM OF SOUTH SEA LUXURY FALSE

Average White Man Soon Would Tire, Says Professor.

By United Press
SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Sept. 29.—Disillusionment awaits the American, who views the South Seas as a place where a pet monkey will bring him a bunch of bananas for lunch, Dr. Albert W. Herre, Stanford university professor said as he set out on his tenth exploration trip into the islands.

"To the tourist the islands of the east seem full of glamor, romance and beauty," Herre said.

"He longs for the uncalendared luxury of living among simple, harmless natives, gathering rich food only by reaching for it, hearing the song of golden orioles and breathing the perfume of orchids."

"All these things are true to a limited degree but only for the natives and the tourists who look from the decks of comfortable liners."

The "average white man," the professor said, could not endure life on "one of these lonely islands."

"He could not overlook the monotonous diet and insufficient water supply, or resist intestinal infections and parasites. He's too accustomed to ice and a varied diet," Herre said.

In 65,000 miles of travel in the Far East and the South Seas the Stanford teacher has seen cannibals and head-hunters; monkeys that eat crabs; bats that eat cocoanuts; a village where a well sunk in a graveyard provides drinking water; and harems of chieftains containing white, brown and yellow women.

He has seen schools of sardines "seven miles long"—the schools, not the sardines, he explained—and has counted 3,060,000 ripe eggs ready to spawn by one female bangoo, a fish 23 inches long.
