NATURE'S FURY STILL BEYOND MAN'S CONTROL

Mastery Over Elements Impossible as Storms Defeat Skill.

BY DAVID DIETZ
Scripps-Howard Science Editor

The news from Mexico and from Italy reminds man that he has not yet mastered nature. He has learned to dig ore from the earth, to turn it with the aid of furnace and forge, into skyscrapers, locomotives and ships.

He has learned to sail his airplanes into the sky. He harnesses the forces of electricity and of explosive gases. His mastery over nature seems complete at a casual glance.

But when nature is roused to fury, then man is puny by comparison. The hurricane, sweeping in from the sea upon 100-mile-an-hour winds, laid waste to the port of Tampico, ravaging a seventy-mile area and piling up a list of dead and injured estimated at 5,000.

The earthquake, rocking south-central Italy and parts of Jugoslavia, wrecked mountain towns and villages, killing and injuring at least 100 people.

The earthquake, the volcanic eruption, the flood, the hurricane, the tornado, and the lightning—these are the forces of nature before which man is still ineffective.

Lightning Bolt Feared

It has been said that both Julius Caesar and Napoleon feared the lightning. This is not hard to understand. Men of their own minds, they felt superior to their fellowmen; they felt assured of their own powers to carry out their plans; they feared the lightning bolt which might cut short their lives and leave their plans unachieved.

While lightning is a subject of lively concern to many people, the facts in the matter seem to be that the average person, on the best of statistical evidence, is pretty safe. It has been said that more people are killed annually in the city of Paris by falling flower pots than by lightning.

Simple Rules Observed

Nevertheless, it is well to remember certain simple rules. If caught on a golf course during a thunderstorm, do not take refuge under a tree. And stay away from wire fences.

Properly installed lightning rods are advisable for farm houses. In the city, the network of electric wires performs the function of lightning rods. Speeding automobiles are more dangerous than lightning in the city.

Power companies, operating long transmission lines, have found it necessary to protect them against lightning. Their chief concern is not a direct hit, which is rather rare, but the creation of induced surges in the lines caused by lightning discharges in the neighborhood of the lines.

Volcanoes Worst Peril

It wasn't scientific curiosity alone which caused Steinmetz to undertake his attempts to create artificial lightning. His imitation bolts were needed in the researches to find out what lightning did to the power lines.

About the only thing to be said about volcanoes is that it is well to stay away from them. But when fertile fields have been found near them, mankind has always preferred to take a chance.

Engineers are in general of the opinion that much of the loss of life and property damage occasioned by earthquakes can be prevented. "Thquakes for the most part, occur in certain areas of the earth where they have occurred in the past. These are the so-called seismic regions, localities where the earth's crust is known to be weak and unsteady.

In all such regions, engineers feel, the territory must be carefully mapped to disclose the so-called faults or breaks in the rock layers. It is along these faults that movement occurs in earthquakes.

FOREST CAMPS WILL BE SET UP IN DUNES PARK

Most of Personnel to Be Men Sent from Places Closed for Winter.

By Times Special

HAMMOND, Sept. 29.—A Civilian Conservation Corps camp will be established at the Dune State Park about Nov. 1, Harry Doyle, custodian of the park, announced after conferring with army officers at Ft. Benjamin Harrison near Indianapolis.

The camp is to be in operation for a six-months' period. It will consist of about 200 civilians and twenty-five army officers and foresters. A few local men may be admitted to the camp, although most of the personnel will be transferred from camps which have been closed for the winter. The men will be employed chiefly in reforestation work.

SAVE PORK FOR NEEDY

Storage Space for 15 Tons for Residents at Bloomington Sought.

By Times Special

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., Sept. 29.—Fifteen tons of cured pork will be distributed from Bloomington to the poor of this vicinity, provided sufficient cold storage facilities can be procured. The local Chamber of Commerce has been advised of the impending relief move Tuesday by William H. Book, director of the Government's campaign on unemployment relief. The chamber now is negotiating with the Bloomington Packing Company in an attempt to obtain space for the meat.
