

University Women Will Hear Mrs. A. M. Hall in Talk on Shawl Collecting

City Woman, Owner of Most Complete Line in Country, Will Give Lecture Before Group on Thursday.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

Dainty Mrs. Archibald M. Hall, who is reputed to own the most complete collection of shawls in the country likes prize fights. It seems paradoxical that any one with such a purely feminine hobby should enjoy such a thoroughly masculine pastime.

Mrs. Hall, who will lecture Thursday on her shawls at the opening meeting of the art lecture series of the American Association of University Women, became intrigued with her husband's habit of shadow-boxing as his setting-up exercises. He had been a boxer at Yale university.

She decided she'd like to see a fight and her husband promised to take her to the first good match scheduled in the city. At her first fight she saw Joe Lynch, bantam weight champion of the world, and she was fascinated by the grace and prowess of the fighter. That was the beginning of her interest, and today when a professional fight of merit is scheduled, Mrs. Hall is likely to be on the sidelines. Her attendance, however, during the last six years hasn't been as regular as it was in former years, because her hobby has led to a profession, which she pursues in the Hall studio of reweaving.

Many of the century old shawls which she collected were damaged. She bemoaned the marring of their beauty. Her interest led to studies of their creation, methods of their design and the quality of the textiles. She became so proficient in detecting the quality and age of the various types of shawls, that museums and collectors sought her judgment.

Six years ago she began mending the exquisite old shawls, coverlets and tapestry pieces. She restored pieces in her own collection to their original beauty, and her friends and acquaintances soon began to seek her skill to repair their damaged articles.

At present she is restoring the linen background of a petit point tapestry, which is about 250 years old and belonging to a man in New York. The linen background had deteriorated until the tapestry was in shreds. By weaving in new linen threads the piece almost completely is restored.

At one time, Mrs. Hall had pieces from the Metropolitan Museum of New York, a coverlet from Washington, a dress from Columbus, Ga.; a coat from Seattle, Wash., and a shawl from Lawrence, Kan., all waiting for repairs.

Many times Mrs. Hall must seek thread of a certain quality to match the thread of the original she is repairing. Then it must be dyed to match in color. At present she is working on a rare old Chinese piece, for which she must dye matching thread.

A society girl comes waiting to Mrs. Hall. She shows her a beautiful dress, bought for a special occasion. The dress is expensive, and was torn when the girl slipped on a stairway at the party, which had been such a tremendous success until the tragedy to the dress.

"Never mind; I can mend it so you'll never know? The solution is simple for Mrs. Hall, and the girl goes away relieved because her favorite dress will be presentable for another happy occasion.

A bachelor comes with a wrinkled brow. What is he to do with a moth-eaten vest? The solution is simple for Mrs. Hall. She hands it to one of her assistants and when the vest is returned, there is no sign of moth holes.

Mrs. Hall's collection of shawls includes every known type, and some which are not duplicated in museums. A collection, donated to the Cincinnati museum by Nicholas Longworth's father, includes the most of one type, but none match Mrs. Hall's in completeness.

Hobbies Given Impetus in U. S. by Roosevelt

BY MRS. C. O. ROBINSON
Times Hobby Editor

IN the brief time that Franklin D. Roosevelt has been President, his collecting activities have had much publicity, and in consequence hobbies have been given an impetus and an added dignity. In the September number of the American Magazine of Art, an article by the editor, Frederic Allen Whiting, describes President Roosevelt's collection of marine pictures, and is illustrated with photographs of some of his favorite prints.

One of the illustrations, a print called "The Hudson at Hyde Park," is the duplicate of a print found by Miss Marion Greene, librarian of the John Heron Art Museum, in an old magazine, the Aldine. In 1908, Mrs. May Wright Sewall presented bound copies of the Aldine for 1873 to the art museum library, and the Indianapolis central library also has copies from 1873 to 1879.

Little is known about the Aldine except that it was published by James Sutton & Co. of New York from 1868 to 1879 and was an unusual magazine for its time and time. The fact that it was treasured by Mrs. Sewall, whose life was devoted to cultural endeavors, places it as a periodical of superior merit.

Logically, a picture entitled "The Hudson at Hyde Park" would have a sentimental appeal to the President since Hyde Park is his ancestral home, though the rarity and beauty of this print entitles it to a place in his choice collection.

IN the Aldine the print accompanied an unsigned article called "Poet's Rivers," which said in part: "Poets of America have their rivers as well as poets of England, and celebrate them in song. Drake sang of the Connecticut, Emerson of the Concord, Longfellow and Lowell of the Charles. Whittier of the Merrimack and Bryant of Green river. Bryant is the most American of all our poets and in nothing so much as in the fidelity with which he has produced our rivers and forests. Green river with the graphic illustration expressly executed for the Aldine is one of his earliest poems."

Although the Hudson river was not mentioned in the article, the print of "The Hudson at Hyde Park" was included as a full page illustration and was signed by G. H. Smilie, a well-known landscape painter, who was born in New York in 1840, died in 1921. As his father was James Smilie, a noted lithographer, one of a famous Scotch family of engravers, this print may have been made for the magazine by Smilie. The subject is not listed among his paintings yet the signature, D. C. Yates S. C., at the right hand side of the print suggests a copy.

Smilie first exhibited in the National Academy in 1863 and was considered a painter of great technical skill. His pictures were poetic and sentimental and his "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse" is the most famous.

MR. WHITTING says that the President's life at his summer home at Campobello, where he spent part of his vacation this year, began his interest in the sea. This interest was heightened during his term of office as assistant secretary of the navy and his love continues, as his vacations attest. The President has an important naval library, including manuscripts, letters, and documents concerning the development of the United States navy. Fifteen hundred prints and paintings in his marine collection are assembled at his Hyde Park home, although a few were taken to the White House, where they hang in his bedroom, office and study. These latter include the painting of "Old Ironsides" by Grant, the picture from which prints were made and widely sold to raise money for reconditioning the historic old ship.

In addition to "The Hudson at Hyde Park," Mr. Whiting's article is illustrated with other prints taken from the President's collection which deal with the Hudson river, notably "A View on the Hudson at West Point," by Lyons & Co., and "A Night on the Hudson," a Currier & Ives print from a painting by Fanny Palmer, made in 1864.

A collection of old prints naturally would be incomplete without a few gems made by Currier & Ives, and nowhere could the President find more delightful marine subjects than in these old prints. They tell of the great whaling industry, of famous catastrophes at sea and the development of the steamboat. The most beautiful are the prints showing the graceful clipper ships, with billowing sails, racing home from China with a cargo of tea or around the Horn to San Francisco during the gold rush of forty-nine.

The original print taken from the Aldine will be on display at the Art Museum this week.

Program for Patients

Monthly entertainment of the Sunnyside Guild at the sanatorium will be held for the patients Tuesday. Mrs. Howard Linkert, assisted by Mrs. Charles Renard, has arranged a program including music by Arnold Peck's orchestra. Mrs. D. B. Sullivan and Mrs. Adrian Hamersley are in charge of refreshments.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Below is a letter which should provoke a lot of comment from our readers. Let's have another red-hot discussion! Everybody join in!

Dear Jane Jordan—I am a girl 23. For about two years I've been going with a married man 33 years old. He doesn't love his wife, but she suspects us, so he doesn't get out to see me very much. I love him more than any one else in the world. What do you think I should do?

BAB.

Answer—Most married men of the educated class may feel committed definitely to their marriages, but they are not adverse to a romance on the side. The woman who elects to love one of them must reconcile herself to half a loaf and be willing to protect her lover from the slightest hint of scandal.

I do not believe that a girl of 23 ever will be satisfied to be the silent member of a three-some. She will spend every waking hour in her life scheming to get the man all to herself, but it is seldom that she succeeds in getting him to give up the wife to whom he feels bound by ties of loyalty. Almost every one who has lived through such an experience admits that the pangs of renunciation outweigh the pleasures of love.

An anonymous woman, writing on "The Single Woman's Dilemma" in the October issue of Harper's, seeks to justify her passion for a married man on the grounds that his marriage already is dead before he seeks the comfort of another woman. In her opinion, a vital relationship which springs up between two people has an entity all its own.

"If we kill it at birth," she argues, "or suffocate it in the manner of mothers who are ashamed of their loins, we are committing a kind of murder."

On the other hand, she points out that the bitter price which a woman may have to pay for claiming a right to love the man who is married may range from humiliation at being deserted to an unwelcome child with no one to father it.

She mentions the woman who has been racked by close relationships with men who are decent enough, but hopeless weak—men who are in a continual state of jitters as to whether they are doing the right thing or not. Such men waver back and forth between the two camps, and are afraid of their wives, yet returning again and again to throw themselves on the mercy of the other woman.

"Such men," she writes, "should be shot at sunrise, for they are not playing fair. Unattached women, who themselves have plenty of strength of character, often lavish their maternal affections on such men and get very little in return."

I believe that this anonymous writer is exactly right in her conclusion that the woman who ventures to love outside of marriage must have the strength to go on alone when the clock strikes twelve and the ball is over. She must learn to bid good-by to her pleasures quite philosophically. According to this

City's 'Sweet Tooth' Is Captured by New Candy Specialty Made of Apple

'Hippity-Hop' Shop Finds Enthusiastic Reception for Caramel Confection; Adults Like It, Too.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

TAKING its name from one of the most popular of the nursery rhymes, a new candy shop has been opened in Indianapolis. This is the "Hippity-Hop Candy Shop" on Maple road, where in the last week two bushels of apples covered with caramel have been sold in a confection which is a specialty of the shop.

"We have discovered that caramel covered apples are making a real appeal to the sweet tooth of people in Indianapolis," Miss Mary Elizabeth Johnson, proprietor of the shop, says. "Many adults come in and buy them, ostensibly for their children; but when they get outside the shop and into their cars, we can see them take the apples from the paper bags and eat them with great enthusiasm."

The apples which are used for this purpose are small, firm ones, into which sticks can be inserted. "King David" apples are the ones which the shop is using now. "Jonathans" were used until they grew too large.

For a special Halloween idea, the caramel covered apples have been prepared with amusing faces on them. The caramel is moulded into shape, and the features on the face are made with Halloween candies in licorice and orange colored hard confections.

Hatchet Accompanies 'Brittle'

ANOTHER specialty of the shop which has caused each box of assorted brittle candy. Dark chocolate has been used for the coating of assorted cream centered candies. This, while it is known as a Dutch type covering, is one which originated in Holland, but has been perfected in this country. The chocolate used for the covering is so dark as to almost appear as licorice.

Many of the recipes for the candies sold in the shop are the result of three generations of candy-making. C. C. Platt, who has charge of the making of the candy, learned his business from his grandfather and father, who originated many ideas for the preparation of such confections. One of these recipes is that for the English rum taffy, which is popular in the shop.

Not only has the shop brought new ideas in candies to Indianapolis, but through the ingenuity of Miss Johnson and Mr. Platt, a new idea in home decoration has been launched. When the shop was open, desiring to use curtains which would always be fresh and attractive, they experimented with curtains made of cellophane, with borders of colored tape and tie backs to match. The idea is being duplicated in several sun-rooms in the city.

Infant Frocks Back to '90's"

THOUGH baby fashions do not change as frequently as others, the new dresses for infants show the general tendency to return to the period of the nineties. Instead of the regulation length of seventeen inches, dresses shown in the infants' department at the Wm. H. Block Company are now twenty-two inches long. These are especially suitable for christenings.

Another interesting new idea for babies is the Noah's Ark high chair pad, made in colored print, and designed in the shape of the ark. At one side is a deep pocket, in which amusing stuffed giraffes, elephants, and lions are kept.

Ribbon-knotted satin comforts for babies are shown in Kewpie designs. Crib sets, of basket weave material, are made with applied figures of dogs and clowns while the designs on other crib sets show sleepy kittens and timid rabbits.
