POLLUTION OF EAGLE CREEK IS CITED BY SIGN

Sheriff's Warning Found by
 Anglers on Sunday
 Fishing Tour.

BY LEFTY LEE
 Times Fishing Editor

While touring Sunday, Walt Jones and the writer found every creek had received more than its share of the Saturday night deluge and was muddy. We finally came to Eagle Creek, north of the city and saw this sign:

"Warning—No swimming here as the water is polluted." It was signed by the sheriff. Pollution only can be caused by some one violating a state law and yet one is able to run into a sign of this kind, without finding any record of any violator being prosecuted for the offense. In this case it not only spoiled the fishing for the angler, but also spoiled the old swimmin' hole. Come on you sportsmen get together and put a stop to this condition. Join an organization that has the courage to fight for its rights. Pollution is legally and morally wrong, but as long as the polluter can get away with it cheaper than obeying the law, he will do so. Your only hope of stopping him is to organize and make this filthy practice cost the guilty ones more than it would to keep the streams clear.

Bill Hurley and Jack Wendling were trying all of the lake, rivers, creeks and gravel pits in the southern part of the state in their final attempt to land a prize-winning bass to enter in The Times bass contest. Our efforts to locate them to find out what luck they had was futile, so we suppose that they still are at some body of water, tossing that Jack's dual spinner at the big ones.

The Marion County Fish and Game Protective Association will hold its annual banquet Thursday night at the Washington. A fish dinner will be served at 6:30. After the guests are filled with wall eye pike, O. Stewart Imhoff, president of the organization, has arranged a program that is sure to please everyone present as it includes fish stories—the anglers' only reward. All anglers are invited even though they are not members of the host organization. A charge of 50 cents a plate will cover all expense. If you plan to be present, you are requested to call Dick Tuttle at Ll. 1107 or drop him a line at 233 East Ohio street.

Hunters in the northern part of the state are putting up a real battle to abolish one of the bluest of blue laws that remains in force in this state, the prohibition of hunting on Sunday. In an editorial the Gary Post-Tribune takes up the battle for hunters and condemns the resolution of the Izak Walton League, that voted against the repeal of this law at their recent state convention in Logansport. The Waltons contended that the opening of Sunday hunting would cause irreparable damage to the cause of conservation in Indiana. Others claimed there would be no point in permitting Sunday hunting as there is no game left, anyway. It is true that game in this state is scarce but that does not excuse this blue law that in our estimation discriminates against the working man, business man and farmer. The working man can not hunt under this condition, the business man must take time away from his business to enjoy this sport, while the farmer is not even permitted to hunt on his own land on the only day of the week away from his labors. It also prevents the farmer from entertaining his Sunday guests as he would like to entertain them and as his guests would like to be entertained. If the Waltons are afraid that Sunday hunting would shoot off all game why did they not go on record to prohibit Monday or Tuesday hunting and let the law open on Sunday for the benefit of the majority? The state would benefit greatly from the added revenue received for hunting licenses and from thousands of people who would enjoy a day in the open if they could plan it without losing time from their duties. This revenue would revert to the conservation department and it could increase breeding grounds, and provide more game for the sportsmen, with the added income. Theaters, ball parks—in fact every kind of sport and pleasure—is open for the people on Sunday, so why discriminate against the hunter?

Hollywood Rates Walker With Another Movie Hit

Former Indianapolis Producer of Stock Appears to Have Another Movie Winner in 'White Woman.'

BY WALTER D. HICKMAN

MARIE BOECOURT, secretary to Stuart Walker, now one of the leading movie directors for Paramount in Hollywood, sends me information that west coast critics believe that Walker has another winner in "White Woman."

Mr. Walker directed "White Woman" with such well-known players as Carole Lombard, Charles Laughton, Charles Bickford, Kent Taylor, Percy Kilbride, James Bell and others in the cast.

It seems strange that many of the men and women he directed in stock in Indianapolis and Cincinnati when they were unknown, are now stars. Take Kay Francis and Elizabeth Patterson, for example, and Edith Nugent if you desire another name.

Daily Variety has this to say about "White Woman":

"A powerful expertly made picture is 'White Woman,' but dealing with subject matter of such strong meat that it will appeal more to class than mass. Out of it towers a performance by Charles Laughton, which will stand up with all distinctive screen characters. It is so dominant and so easily developed that the other roles practically are feeders."

Carole Lombard, Charles Bickford and Kent Taylor stand out in well conceived parts. Miss Lombard and Bickford should help pull this, with an alluring title up.

Stuart Walker's direction is sure, intelligent and admirably suited to the story and screen play. He captures a dreadful kind of suspense for the jungle drama, revealing the jungle world from the very beginning and never relaxes it to the last foot. Play has unusual interest in its main development and elements in its main evolution and elements as a Conrad's "Heart of Darkness."

One serious production fault is the poor and tame, almost unimaginative direction by several players, especially Laughton, who are often used as mere background, bad fault even if conceived as part of his scene characterization.

Up to a genius of evil, a white emperor of the jungle who brings a castoff white woman falls in love with Kent Taylor. Laughton tries to send them to their death—he has escaped from a death sentence as a escaped convict, as tough as the river king, comes to interpose and to die with the main scene uprisings.

The picture is an aesthetic triumph, a picture number, but accomplishes precisely what it set out to do.

This movie probably will be shown either at the Indiana or Circle theaters here.

Indianapolis theaters today offer: "Once in a Lifetime" at the Playhouse, a Civic theater production; "Bombshell" at the Palace, "I'm No Angel" at the Circle, "Love, Honor and Oh Baby" at the Lyric; "To the Last Man" at the Ambassador, "Song of Songs" at Keith's; "Emperor Jones" at the Apollo; and "Mary Stevens, M.D." on the screen at the Indiana, and burlesque at the Mutual and Colonial.
