

Lee Carter's Bent for Map Making Dates Back to Grade School Days

Designer of Part of Indiana World's Fair Display Reveled as Boy in Adventure Told by Geography and History.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN Times Woman's Page Editor

BECAUSE geographies and history books held the adventure which fired a little boy's imagination, he grew up to be a cartographer; at least he has made strides toward success in that direction.

Lee Carter began making maps as a hobby because he'd been studying the map of the world since he was in grade school. Many know him as the designer of the pictorial map of Indiana, which the department of conservation commissioned him to make. The map, showing the state's history, points of interest and holdings of the department of conservation has been distributed to more than 3,000 individuals, and has become a guide in studies of many grade school pupils.

This map, however, was not his first venture in the field of cartography. "His first love," as he calls it, was an historical map of the United States, which he has made no effort to publish.

Pictorial maps lately have become popular as decorative pieces in homes as well as for informative uses. A number have been published, but none show Mr. Carter's endeavor to recapture the spirit of the sixteenth century, when the most outstanding art work on maps was executed.

For instance, he uses the French script in lettering, which enhances the map as a decorative piece, and he designs colorful cartouches or title blocks and reproduces many of the old figures, used by the old map designers where the fauna and flora were a mystery to them.

One of the most artistic maps Mr. Carter has made is the one of Foxcliffe, the country estate of Mr. and Mrs. Frank B. Shields in Morgan county. He visited the estate, studied the country history to get material for the background and reproduced it in water color on German water color paper.

Border Richly Colored
Mrs. Shields presented the map to her husband as a birthday gift last August. In a corner border Mr. Carter developed the sixteenth century decorative idea. In rich reds and natural colors, he worked into the border design leaves of the various trees and plants, and native animals on the estate. Close observation of the border reveals oak, poplar, elderberry, and fern leaves, a frog, terrapin, acorn, fox heads, snails, dogs and chickens. Spots of silver, blue and cream enhance the rich colors.

On the map locating the various points of interest, Carter has made representations of the subjects. Prince Genius, Mrs. Shields' prize stallion, is shown as is her Great Dane.

A sketch of a child in a pony cart represents the Shields' young son. Historical information reveals that "It was in January, 1847, that the first great flood in White river on which the eyes of white men had ever gazed, raged over this land." Another note says: "This was once a part of 'The New Purchase,' so called from a treaty signed at St. Mary's, O., Oct. 3, 1818."

Old Dedication Used

The old spirit is shown in the dedication, which is a duplicate of one by Mercator, an early map-maker. It reads:

"To the most charming and most gracious wife of Frank B. Shields Esq., this work, begun and completed under her favoring care, dedicated by Lee Carter."

The scale reads "as the crow flies," for the 900-acre estate rambles over hill and dale and the actual walking distances far exceed the flat surface scale. A fanciful note is provided by old looking fish in the river, copied from old maps, and other figures on the edge of the map.

Shown in Fair Display

Carter reproduced on a large scale the conservation map of Indiana in the exhibit at Century of Progress exposition. Because of the large size, he added certain matters of interest. Working with him was E. H. Daniels, sculptor, who made the replicas of historical buildings placed on the map, 16 1/2 by 11 1/2 feet in size. Mr. Carter lay on his stomach to paint the lettering on this map, produced in three by five feet sections.

When Mr. Carter visited the fair recently, he discovered that most of the replicas on the map had been taken, "supposedly by visitors for souvenirs."

Carter said, "I have used two volumes of old maps as my dictionary and bible for design of maps. I like the spirit of those old maps, and have no desire to improve on their style."

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

If you haven't expressed your views on the question under discussion, write your letter now! Letters of blame are just as welcome as letters of praise. Speak your mind.

Dear Jane Jordan—You encouraged a mother to smoke and drink to please her husband. Oh, may God forbid and save her from this nasty curse! I often think an old sow has more real love for her offspring than a cigarette-smoking mother! You probably fail to see how hard the devilish tobacco interests are trying to enslave all our women, girls and boys to a mighty dirty, stinkin' thing like the cigarette.

The lowest moral can smoke cigarettes. Why should any one sell their soul to these degraders of our women, girls and boys? I suppose you will refuse to publish this answer.

CHRISTIAN A. CLEMENS.
Answer—A word of explanation to those who did not read the beginning of this discussion: Devoted Wife and Mother wrote that her husband liked parties where cocktails and cigars were part of the entertainment. Jane Jordan told her that such things were objectionable only when used in excess.

The statement started a small but interesting war, with the opposition led by Mrs. A. C. So far two letters of approval and eight letters of disapproval have been received. Excerpts from some of them appear today.

Dear Jane Jordan—May I ask Mrs. A. C. why she reads your column when she disapproves of it? Could it be that she is hoping to find some spicy rejoinder on your part? I have failed to see anything in your column unfit for the adolescent girl to read.

Mrs. A. C., do ask your friend, the judge, who thanks God that he had a good wife whether he ever heard of a minister whose son or daughter was called before the court?

I believe he will admit that even the best of ministers with the most "trustworthy" wife may be ignorant of the science of parenthood. I have had experience as a probation officer and know whereof I speak.

The mother who loses the respect of her child because she drinks a cocktail and smokes a cigarette with her husband, failed to gain the child's respect and confidence while she was still a babe on milk toast while she ate bacon and eggs.

The weakling is one who is unable to control his appetite for that which gives him pleasure, be it eating, drinking, dancing, or love-making. Everything which adds joy to life is permissible if done in moderation. Even criticism is desirable if given in a sane, temperate vein.

I feel that you, Mrs. A. C., belong to the class of people who, if they did drink, would do so in the same temperate manner as you delivered your criticism.

Dear Jane Jordan—You say you know plenty of young people brought up in homes where cultured mothers serve cocktails and smoke cigarettes without the slightest harm to any member of the family. May the good Father forgive our education and civilization if it be to this end! The mightiest and swiftest prayers ever offered have gone up from a mother's lips. No, never from lips stained with cigarette or wet with wine. God save our mothers from this curse of smoke and drink, for the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that moves the world!

GERTRUDE EVERETT.
Dear Jane Jordan—Mrs. A. C.'s letter is representative of a number of things which I think hold this country back in cultural and social development; extreme narrow-mindedness, inability to think things out while keeping an unprejudiced viewpoint, unwillingness to face facts as they are, and an old-fashioned timidity about discussing questions which certainly need the light of common sense shed on them.

The main trouble is that your column is too good for some of your readers (and Mrs. A. C. obviously is a constant reader, even if she reads only to heckle you.) She had better stick to those who give a sweet, evasive answer, which to the undersigned sounds correct whether it has any real meaning or not.

I'm all for the honesty and frankness which you show. I'm glad some one has the courage to print her honest view on subjects which are brought to her attention, and the sincerity to try to apply them to the problems of real people.

A COLUMN CONVERT.
Answer—Letters of disapproval are acknowledged from Mrs. Ernestine Strain, A. Times Reader, A. Young Mother, Mrs. D. M. L. Lillian, and an Old-Fashioned Mother. Letters of approval have come from an Admirer, I'm For You, L. M., Mrs. Davinroy, One Who Knows, A. C. Jane Too, 1933, L. W. F., and from Wag.

All of these letters and future letters will be forwarded to Devoted Wife and Mother, who writes: "Thanks so much for your advice. I think it will work wonders for me. After attend a few more parties, I will write you another letter to print which I think will change Mrs. A. C.'s mind."

Food Cooked in Open Air Has Appeal

Thick Steak Ranks High Among Devotees of Outdoor Meals.

Miss Ruth Chambers, whose articles start today as a daily feature of this paper, is a home economics lecturer and writer of wide experience. She is a member of the staff of the national livestock and meat board and has done considerable work in experimental cooking and is a devotee of the open air. She will appear later in the city under auspices of the Times.

BY RUTH CHAMBERS
Cooking out of doors, over a camp fire, or outdoor fireplace, is fun enough to be classed as a popular outdoor sport. Food cooked in this way seems to have exquisite flavor it never attains indoors. Of course, the keen appetites which are brought to these repasts lend a piquant sauce all their own.

Even these stimulated appetites may be blunted when something goes wrong and the cooks—often amateurs—haven't known the best way of doing things.

Here are directions and recipes which take away the possibility of failure in these open-air culinary endeavors.

A favorite meal for outdoors preparation is a broiled porterhouse steak, cut thick, with baked potatoes and other vegetables roasted at the same time.

How to Build Fireplace

Construct an outdoor fireplace with stones or bricks, or use freshly cut green logs, or dig a ditch deep enough for a fire. Let a large fire burn down until it is a mass of coals. Place steak on center of the rack and brown it well on one side, turn and brown on other. For a steak an inch and a half thick this will require about forty minutes.

Wrap medium-sized potatoes in green leaves and bury them in the red hot embers. When potatoes can be easily pierced with a fork, they are done. Allow about twenty minutes for roasting. Remove from the embers, cut the open and put a pat of butter on each.

Corn, onions, sweet potatoes, carrots, turnips and apples may be roasted in the same way.

Lamb—Hunter Style

Here is another delicious outdoor dish—lamb, hunter style:

2 Pounds lamb, from leg
8 Slices bacon
6 Tomatoes, sliced
6 Onions, sliced
Salt
Pepper

Have the lamb cut into 1-inch squares. Choose a strong, pointed green stick about 1/2-inch thick or a heavy iron wire fork for a skewer. Thread a slice of bacon onto the stick, then alternate squares of lamb, tomato and onion. Last of all thread the other end of bacon over the stick. Broil over hot coals, never over blazing fire. When the outside is browned, hold farther from the coals so that it will cook more slowly. Serve with graham rolls.

There are many savory mixtures which may be cooked in a frying pan over an open fire. For instance, ground beef and bacon.

Ground Beef and Bacon

2 Pounds ground beef
12 Slices bacon
1 Onion, diced
Salt and pepper

Mix ground meat with onion and pat into small flat cakes. Wrap with bacon, season and place in frying pan on grate of outdoor fireplace. Turn when, thoroughly browned on one side. When both sides are browned, the meat will be done. Serve with chili sauce.

Mexican Sandwiches

Then there are Mexican camp sandwiches which are hearty enough and piquant enough to satisfy the hungriest camper to your camp fire.

1 Pound bacon
1 Pound shredded dried beef
1 Cup grated cheese
1/2 Cup chili sauce

Place bacon in cold frying pan and cook slowly until crisp. Remove from pan and drain on brown paper. Remove half of fat from pan. Chop dried beef in remaining fat. Add chili sauce and blend. Add grated cheese and stir until melted. Spread on buttered buns, top with a slice of bacon and serve while hot.

A fitting dessert to go with these outdoor meals is found in marshmallows, toasted over the fire.

"FIN" PATTERN

There's no stopping necklines at the base of the throat these days. Up they go until they actually inclose the neck in soft folds.

They're just another indication of the beginning of a new era in fashion—an era inspired by the early 1900s. And you can even detect the suggestion of the higher, fuller bustline in spreading bows, posed under the chin like this.

But the neckline is not the only smart detail of this frock. Don't overlook the modified "fins" on the sleeves or the panel seaming, so chic and slenderizing. It's the perfect frock to make at home—the lines are so simple and the pieces are so easy to put together.

The original was made in soft, heavy woolen in putty beige and it is smart in any of the rich Edwardian shades such as evergreen, garnet or wild blackberry. Size 16 requires 2 1/2 yards 54-inch material. Width about 1 1/2 yards.

Pattern No. 5374 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 bust.

Unique Bath Salon Will Increase Facilities of Ayres' Beauty Service

Massage and Light Treatments to Be Available in Tinted Marble Environment Beginning Wednesday.

BY HELEN LINDSAY
INDIANAPOLIS women will be introduced to a new health and beauty service Wednesday, with the opening of the new beauty bath salon at L. S. Ayres and Company. The baths have been installed in a section of the store adjoining the beauty salon. They are built of pale tinted marble, and probably are the only baths of their kind in this country, which have separate compartments for steam baths.

Four attendants will be in charge of the baths. There will be an experienced masseuse, a physical culture director and an attendant in charge of the light treatments, which will be given with the aid of a quartz lamp.

Each patron of the new bath salon will have a diagnosis of her own case made upon entering for treatment. If she desires to reduce only certain portions of her body, it will be noted on a card. These observations will be studied by the attendants, who will select for her proper exercises.

Treatment in the salon include scrubbing of the skin with a unique brush, made from a dried cucumber, salt and steam baths, massages and exercises. Light treatments from the quartz lamp provide heat ten degrees more intense than that from the rays of the sun. Artificial sun tan can be attained from this treatment.

Kroger Uses New Food Sales Plan

A MARKET which has its own kitchen, and which supplies an up-to-date catering service, has been tried out in the Kroger Drive-In Market at Forty-sixth street and College avenue, during the last year. It has proved so successful that the Kroger company has opened a duplication of the market at East Tenth street and Drexel avenue. It was opened formally Thursday.

The drive-in market idea is original with the Kroger company. It was introduced when officials of the company realized that many women did their own marketing, and took groceries home in family cars. The markets are designed with a spacious parking section, where patrons can park their cars almost at the very door of the stores.

Kitchens Can Supply Complete Menu

EACH department of the market is independent of the other. Foods are grouped in departments. The new market, like the one opened a year ago, has a grocery department, a meat department, a section for the display of fruits, another for canned goods, and an elaborate and complete delicatessen department.

Foods in the delicatessen department are prepared in kitchens equipped at the stores. Included in the foods displayed are salads, prepared meats, baked fowls and bakery products. Individual molds of fruit salads and other special food items are shown there.

It is possible for the hostess planning a party to buy prepared foods for the entire menu in this department. If she has original ideas which she desires to carry out in her entertaining, or if she wishes to serve foods different from those already displayed, the experts in the Kroger kitchens will assist her in planning and preparing them.

Health Program Opens Tonight

THE first of a series of classes in health and reducing exercises will be held tonight in the social room of All Souls Unitarian church, under the direction of Mrs. Emma Abel Dunning. Mrs. Dunning, before her marriage, was physical director at Manual Training high school. She is a graduate of Sargent School of Physical Education, Boston.

The classes are offered in a course of six lessons for $2.
