These Congressmen!

Britons, Visiting Ickes' Office, Raise Eyebrows at Sight of Typical Delegation.

BY GEORGE ABELL
Times Special Writer

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—Two English visitors went to call on Interior Secretary Harold Ickes.

As they were being admitted to his private office, a great clamor broke out.

"I say, what's the noise?" asked one.

The other shook his head.

Just then a sudden surge of congressmen nearly took both men off their feet. The congressional gentlemen tempestuously invaded the office, and the air became full of loud words, agitation and excitement.

In the midst of the irruption, the two Englishmen were completely submerged.

"What's up?" shouted one to his friend.

The other didn't know.

Then the storm subsided just as suddenly. The congressmen filed out with regimental precision.

Quiet reigned again. Ickes calmly turned to the amused Britishers.

"You see," he explained, "yesterday I announced that I might ask for $2,000,000 more for public works. These men are trying to get public works projects for their states."

"Oh, yes," blinked the Englishmen.

It was rumored in the diplomatic corps last night that Senator Martinez-Teddy, ex-president of the Montevideo Jockey Club, will succeed Minister Jacob Varela as envoy of Uruguay at Washington.

Blount, former Indianapolis minister, died Tuesday.

She is survived by a daughter, Miss Ette Blount, of Alhambra. She was a sister-in-law of Mrs. E. S. Conner, Mrs. Mary J. Warman and Homer S. Blount of Indianapolis.

tored here late yesterday afternoon, to be a guest at the British embassy.

The admiral's full name and title is the Hon. R. A. R. Plunkett-Erle-Drax. Those who know him intimately call him "Erle"—which sometimes confuses flunkies. They mistake him for a belted earl. Sir Ronald Lindsay, the big British ambassador, calls him simply "Admiral."

Red-liveried footmen threw open the doors of the embassy as Admiral and Mrs. Drax appeared. They were warmly greeted by their host and hostess, and the entire embassy staff was presented.

Last night the toast to his majesty, George V, was drunk in port wine, as Admiral and Mrs. Drax were guests at a formal dinner at the embassy, together with commanding officers of H. M. S. Danae and H. M. S. Norfolk.

ELECTION BETS BANNED

Englishmen No Longer May Gamble on 'Majorities.'

By United Press

LONDON, Nov. 9.—Election betting has been outlawed by London's stock exchange. A better used to be able to buy an imaginary stock before election known as "Majorities."

If the stock was quoted at 150, he paid £150. If the Conservatives won with a majority of 160 seats, he could sell it afterward at a £10 profit, while if 140 was the majority, he lost that much.

USSAKI BULENT BEY, modern Turkish diplomat, will leave Washington on Nov. 25 and sail for home on the S. S. Conte di Savoia. Being very up-to-date, he will fly from Brindisi to Istanbul—a feat that would amaze his grandfather.

The polished young Turkish gentleman has carved a place for himself in this capital. He is engaging, witty and much in demand at debutante parties. Often he acted entirely on impulse, sometimes with amusing results.

Once, dancing at the Shoreham, Bulent found the ballroom too crowded. He commandeered five members of the orchestra, took them to his home, and danced there the remainder of the evening with three companions.

Bulent is very fond of airplanes. Recently he motored to Chicago with Ambassador Ahmet Muhtar, and flew from there to Los Angeles, then back to Washington from the Pacific coast.

"I am sorry to lose him," commented Envoy Muhtar. "He has been a capable assistant."

Nobody knows much about Bulent's successor, except that his name is Seffullah Bey and he's good to horses.

Dr. Coulter has been prominent in civic and health work for many years. He is dean emeritus of Purdue university and is a pioneer in tuberculosis work, having been one of the organizers of the Tippecanoe County Tuberculosis Association more than twenty years ago.
