

Clubs' Ban on Women Nears End

'Eveless Edens' of City Disappearing Before Feminine Drive

BY BEATRICE BURGAN Times Woman's Page Editor

THERE may be among us austere gentlemen who seek refuge from feminine company in their clubs. But alas for this species of male, he finds his club favoring women and departing from the old order of things, in which women were safely in the background.

The University Club member may feel himself more fortunate than the men who belong to the Columbia and Indianapolis Athletic Clubs. He can slip in the front door unnoticed without brushing the coat of a bustling female for time has never changed the rule that women must enter the side door of the University Club.

Before the Athletic club became so much of a family club, women guests were relegated to the side door. But now they not only may come in the front door, but the south lobby in the front of the club has been designated for their use. However, they can't cross the boundary line into the north lobby, for it has been reserved for the comfort of men.

The regime of the Columbia Club was changed in favor of women when it moved into its new clubhouse. The club was built with main entrance which was to serve men as well as men guests. This was a departure from the "side door" rule of the old clubhouse.

Basement Is Male Realm

The basement of the University Club is sacred to masculine pleasures. Here members play billiards, dine in the grill, and college clubs frequently gather in the gun room. Women must keep to their dining room on the first floor for luncheon while the main dining room on the second floor is opened to them only for dinners.

Both the Athletic and Columbia clubs have done away with the diets that women must keep to their dining rooms for luncheons. In the early days of the Athletic club, a man brought a woman guest for luncheon, he had to go to the women's dining room.

Certain rooms of these clubs accommodate women guests, while the University Club limits its housing privileges to men. When the Columbia Club never has opened its up to them by providing a manure table for their exclusive use on the mezzanine floor.

Beer Made for Liberality

An added privilege for women guests of the Columbia Club members came with the return of beer. The club opened its grill or stein room on the first floor after 9 to serve the after-theater crowds who wished to stop for a "sip and bite."

The game rooms of the Athletic and Columbia clubs are the members' "holy of holies." Here they can ponder over their domino, checker, chess and bridge problems without the interruptions of feminine company.

All in all, it's a privileged age for us women. Men may complain all they wish about "feminine invasion," but we can smile enigmatically and "just suppose it's our good company." Personally, we eternally thank the gentlemen who granted us ingress to their thresholds, we know it took a bit of generosity to yield to our invasion.

We realize that the present economic conditions make it extremely hazardous for a young couple to start out comparatively unprepared, but he is a brilliant young man and has very good prospects for the future, so that side of the problem does not worry me so much.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am very deeply in love with a young man just my own age—20—who is attending college with two more years to go. His mother actively dislikes me, and has done everything in her power to turn him against me, but without any success.

We are debating whether or not to be married secretly and let him finish school or to try our luck at getting married only and winning over his family. If we do this we are afraid his folk will not let him go on to school. I am afraid that if we do marry and he can not finish school that he always will hold it against me and thus jeopardize our happiness. But at the same time two years seem an eternity.

Dear Jane Jordan—I have been foolish enough to jump from the frying pan into the fire by taking a boy's fraternity pin, with all that entails, just to get out of whom I didn't care. Now, at the same time there is a young man I have known for several years who can make my heart flutter without the slightest effort. Since I have accepted the fraternity pin I have commenced paying attention to me and tells me he cares deeply for me. But I have made such a mess of things so far, I am afraid to do anything further without some mature advice.

DOWNRIGHT DUMB.

Answer: You got in your messes by evading the truth instead of being straightforward. For years women had to gain their ends by subterfuge. The result is that they have a bad habit of taking a circuitous route to a given goal instead of a straight course. Try being absolutely honest and you will be so involved in embarrassing situations.

Scavenger Hunt Fad Takes Grip on City

Miss Jean Alice Shaver

SCAVENGER hunts, the new game in which the imagination runs rampant and ingenuity reaches its heights, has taken Indianapolis society by storm in the last week after spreading havoc in the east.

Following its conception in London by Mrs. Marshall Field III, the fad spread to New York, and Gotham police officials verged on insanity as the "Four Hundred" took to it with unbridled enthusiasm.

Now the fad is spreading westward. The rules are simple. The hostesses line up her guests and instruct them to bring back six or eight designated articles within a few hours. But the fun comes when the guests learn what articles they have to find. It's apt to be anything from Mahatma Gandhi's sheet to Mae West's peeled grape.

Playing at the game with a little extra enthusiasm, the society boys and girls nearly disrupted the musical show, "As Thousands Cheer," to obtain one of the prized articles, a red carnation from the buttonhole of Clifton Webb, star of the show. Others stormed the dressing room of the beautiful Marilyn Miller, musical comedy star, stealing off with her dainty chemise.

Miss Irma Drake opened the local scavenger season a few nights ago at her home at 5230 North Meridian street. Among her guests were: Jean Alice Shaver, Dean Rogers, Frances Kearby, Louise Nivens, Jean Underwood, Charles Buchanan, Jane Gent, Helen Robinson, Mary Koehler, Mary Florence Fletcher and Emily Wolpon.

Joining in the enthusiasm of their fair companions were Robert Langsenkamp, Frank Reissner, William Eiger, David McKinstrey, David Bon, George Hayes, Harrison Snider, John Hancock, Frank Shaver, Ralph Lemcke and Fred Dickson.

Miss Drake assembled her guests at 8:30 and announced:

"You will go out in pairs and bring back to me the following articles: Five Indian head pennies, a copy of Russ Colombo's theme song of two years ago, a live goldfish, two letters postmarked 1928, a wig, a prominent bootlegger's autograph, a yo-yo and a red, white and blue necktie."

All contestants must be back here by 11 o'clock sharp, but before you return you must have written out on pink paper the correct words in the opening sentence spoken over radio station WLW at 10:30 o'clock. Now go, and good luck. You'll need it."

ACCORDING to testimony of the Indianapolis hunters, few of their friends now fail to believe that they have gone stark, staring mad. Russ Colombo's theme song of 1931 proved to be "You May Call It Madness."

Indian head pennies proved scarce because of the myth circulated some time ago that world's fair officials would pay 25 cents for every coin. The scavenger hunters would have doubled that price as they visited scores of filling stations and drug stores asking for the prized pennies.

One pair of hunters began to feel that they had the contest in the bag as yo-yos, autographs, gold fish, wigs and letters were unearthed. One missing article, however, was the necktie.

From house to house they hurried, arousing irate dwellers, but the search proved futile. Disconsolate, the couple stood under a corner street lamp debating what steps to take.

Suddenly the young lady gave vent to a scream of delight and grabbed at her escort's throat. "Well, forever more. You have been wearing a red, white and blue tie around all night and nobody noticed it!"

THE winners of the hunt proved to be Miss Jean Alice Shaver and her partner, Fred Dickson. It came out that Miss Shaver judiciously interpreted the hour of 10:30 over station WLW to stand for eastern standard time, rather than central standard time as did the other hunters. By this means, Miss Shaver obtained the opening sentence exactly an hour before the rest of the contestants.

Society members plan several more scavenger hunts for the coming week-end, rumor has it.

Citizens are warned not to interrupt the police that loiter at running loose on the streets of Indianapolis if excited couples ask where they can find such things as Mayor Sullivan's ax handle, or Pleasant Greenlee's patronage list.

The chances are that it will just be a scavenger hunt.

New Tyrolean Costumes to Be Modeled by Two City Children at Block's Store

Margaret Miller and Harriet Stafford Will Wear Reproductions of Clothes From 'Land of the Yodel.'

BY HELEN LINDSAY

"MAKE-BELIEVE," that most interesting of children's pastimes, will be played tomorrow at the William H. Block Company, when children will model the new Tyrolean costumes being introduced at the store. Dressed in authentic copies of clothing worn by active Swiss youngsters, Margaret Miller, young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Miller, and Harriet Stafford, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Stafford, will display the new costumes. If they break out into a real Alpine yodel the audience will not be surprised, for the colorful dresses they will wear are certainly conducive to realistic play.

Only one store in each large city is presenting the new Tyrolean clothing. Already adopted in fashions for grown-ups, the Swiss children's styles have become increasingly popular in recent months. British mothers first adopted them for home wear, after viewing the pictures of their children, sent back from schools in the Tyrol.

The fashions shown at Block's include dresses for girls from three to seven, and matching suits for small boys. The quaint pattern of the material is only one of the interesting features of the wash dresses shown. In bright Alpine colors, these are of plain material and gay checked gingham. They are made with aprons, on which wool flowers form decorations.

Sheer white gumpies are worn with them. The gumpies are made with full puffed sleeves, and gathered necks, fastening with a draw-string. Other dresses are made of velvets and corduroy. Some are made with gathered skirts, and clever buttoned up waists. Jumper styles are prevalent in the Swiss mountains, according to these authentic copies. One style is shown with suspender-like straps, which are held together by a strap across the front. The connecting strap is fastened to the shoulder straps with metallic buckles, and the skirt buttons to the suspenders at the waist. This same style is carried out in suits for small boys.

These are the selections which have been made by Miss Gladys Calvert, representative of City's, who has come to L. S. Ayres for the opening of the new "Perfume Bar" this week.

"Every woman should consider her own type in making her selection of perfume," Miss Calvert explains. "Mrs. Dall's personality and appearance are characteristic of the hyacinth. Mrs. Roosevelt's graciousness, which seems to me most outstanding characteristic, exemplifies the nodding grace of a red rose."

Men Admit Liking for Fragrance

NOT only must women consider their own types, however, in making perfume selections, but the type of the man with whom they are to be associated. Miss Calvert believes that men do like perfume. "They even buy it for themselves," she asserts. "In City perfumes they like hyacinth, lilac and violet scents. They are no longer reticent about admitting that they buy perfume for their own use."

Included in the elaborate new bar at L. S. Ayres shows perfumes are charming colored purple flasks, with tasselled cork and miniature copies of the bottles in which large amounts of perfume are contained.

Large flasks of Lelong's, Coty's, and products of other well known perfumers are shown in the mirrored fronts of the new bar. Models in Ayres' tea room have suggested for them appropriate perfumes by the attendants.
