

Party to Be Centered in Beer Garden

Thanksgiving Eve Will Be Celebrated By Columbia Club.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Women's Page Editor

WERE Gambrinus, mythical Flemish king, to look on the Columbia Club at its German beer garden party Thanksgiving eve, he'd be tempted to step down from his cask and raise his tankard of beer to drink to the health of the guests. Gambrinus, figuratively represented as a cask, would rejoice that he has been accredited these many years with invention of beer.

In order that members may feel the genial spirit of the typical German beer party, the entertainment committee has arranged for transformation of the third floor corridor into a beer garden.

Members playing bridge in the women's dining room will pause in the beer garden before they go on to the main dining room for dancing to the music of Ed Resener and his Columbians.

Bar Maids Will Serve

All the usual trappings of a dignified club will be removed for the festive scene of a garden. At intervals among the fir trees in the background will be lamps on posts, casting dim shadows over the rustic tables. Red, blue and green lights will add to the theme of gayety.

Six German bar maids will serve guests seated at the old hickory tables. They will switch their red skirts, banded in blue as they hurry about serving beer and pretzels. Their costumes will be completed by black laced bodices and white caps.

On the north side of the corridor, an old mahogany will be stalled, and a bartender will dispense foaming drinks.

'Little Band' on Program

Songs of the days when beer gardens were centers of friendly conviviality will be played by "The Little German Band," of Lebanon. The musicians will be dressed in appropriate costumes. The gay tunes will invite guests to join in the chorus. The band will play at intervals from 8 until the close of the evening's entertainment.

Dancing will begin in the main dining room, where tables will be laid with red and white checked cloths. Until "auf wiedersehen" at 1, the Columbians will play.

Daily Recipe

HAM PUFFS

- 1 1-2 cups diced cold cooked ham
- 1 1-2 cups thin white sauce
- 1 cup button mushrooms
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 2 tablespoons pimento, minced
- Salt and pepper
- Ripe olives, sliced
- Cream puffs

Brown the mushrooms in melted butter. Add the diced ham, mushrooms, pimento and salt and pepper to the white sauce. Heat thoroughly in the top of the double boiler. Fill and decorate with slices of the ripe olives and strips of pimento.

Glazed cold meats are a bit different and out of the ordinary, and you will like them.

Have a Hobby

Chicago Will Be Host to Second Hobby Show

I love to gather rare antiques. Old quilts and quilted hooded rugs. But some I like to get a spark. From lettered shaving mugs. A pewter plate will bring a thrill. I crave a candle mold. But hair wreaths lurking under glass. Just simply leave me cold.

BY MRS. C. O. ROBINSON
Times Hobby Editor

THE second annual hobby show will open at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, on Saturday morning and continue until Dec. 7. H. C. Lightner, publisher of Hobbies, a magazine for collectors, who was responsible for last year's successful exhibition, again will be the director.

Collectors from all over the world met Mr. Lightner this summer at his hobby shop on the Venetian Bridge at a Century of Progress Exposition, and many midwesterners inquired as to the possibility of a hobby show this year.

Knowing that the public interest in collecting has increased since the last show because of the doubled subscription list of Hobbies, and the immediate response to the announcement of the coming show, Mr. Lightner feels, as he expresses it, that "this year's show will be a knock-out." As the entire exhibition hall space was engaged promptly, the adjoining mezzanine floor was arranged as a juvenile department.

Many of the exhibitors who helped to make the show a success last year have taken booths again—some coming from as far as New England with antique glass and china. Numerous hobbies not previously represented are included also. The Ship Modelers' Club of Chicago will

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

If you are puzzled about what you ought to do, write to Jane Jordan for advice. She will answer your questions in this column.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am a man of 26. Three years ago I went to room with a fine family, a man, woman and daughter, age 17. The daughter and I were always cutting up like brother and sister. I took her riding, but never to shows nor dances, for I was going steady and so was she. I got married and left. In three months I separated from my wife and came back. She was to be married in a couple of months, but I started taking her to shows and dances. After I was there three months she told her steady not to come back for she was going with me. She took it for granted that I meant to do right by her. She told me that she was sincerely in love with me and didn't think it would do any good. I made her give in. She did for she was sure I loved her, although I never told her but I showed her in every possible way.

After two months, I decided I was still in love with my wife and went back to her. I really think a lot of that kid, for she was really in love with me, and I am worried. I called up the other day and her mother said she couldn't get her to eat, and that she cried herself to sleep. The doctor said she would have a breakdown if she didn't quit acting that way. Should I go see her?

Answer—You are not a bad young man, but an extremely ignorant one. If you had been more highly developed, you would have known that no sensitive young girl can accept the embrace of a man who does not stir her deeply.

Sexuality has no more significance to you than brushing your teeth. It is something to be enjoyed for the pleasure and stimulus of the moment, regardless of the feeling of your partner. It has no profound emotional meaning.

The girl's sexuality is more intimately tied up with her feelings. It is regrettable that she had her first experience with a boy of your type, for when she recovers from her crushing disillusionment, she is apt to be hard and take the attitude that the physical side of love means nothing to you or the other.

This attitude is far more destructive to a woman's values than a man's. She simply isn't constituted to take a love affair or leave it. When she tries to adopt this masculine attitude, she loses touch with the deeper side of her own nature. It is easy for her to slide from experience to experience until she is completely bored and blasé, done with life before she has had a chance to enjoy it.

I do not know how you can right the wrong you have so carelessly made. It is too bad to know her completely in her grief. Possibly if you could talk it out with her once, it might be something of a comfort, and would help to prevent her from going completely to pieces.

One of the fundamental differences between men and women is that women are comforted by talking things out, whereas men prefer to walk out on a painful situation. The fact that you are worried enough to write for advice redeems you a little. Otherwise, I should think of you as a shallow, selfish cad, without capacity for feeling any deeper than an itch.

Dear Jane Jordan—I met a girl last summer called the more I see her the more I go for her. But the worst of it is she is married and has a little girl about 2. Her husband says he can't get a job, so he lays around the house and sleeps. They have broken up a couple of times, but he gets a job and she goes back to him. He has lost his last job, and she is puzzled as to whether to stick with him or not.

She works in a downtown store and keeps the house going. She doesn't gain anything living with him, feeding him, does she? I won't date her while she is living with her husband, but when she lives with her parents, I do. Please give your viewpoint of this. BOB.

Answer—If the girl's husband is utterly worthless, she would be justified in leaving him. But if he is a victim of the economic times, it would be unfair for her to desert him just because she is unwilling to face a crisis with him. The man may be profoundly discouraged, and more in need from encouragement from his wife than he ever will be again. I have no way of knowing what the facts are.

Miss Mary Luten and Babe Pierce attended the Chicago-Dartmouth football game in Chicago Saturday.

Miss Margaret McLaughlin, who has been visiting Miss Betty Mushlitz, has returned to her home in Cedar Lake.

Miss Sheila Brown will spend the Thanksgiving holidays in St. Louis. She will attend activities of Principia college.

Miss Wilhelmina Luten, Chicago, will spend Thanksgiving with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dan B. Luten.

Mr. and Mrs. Eli Lilly, 5807 Sunset lane, are visiting at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Coughlin are visiting in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Raymond Stone King, 2926 Kenwood avenue, and Palmer P. Seal of Odon and Indianapolis, will motor to Cincinnati for Thanksgiving holidays. They will visit Mrs. Stone King's mother, Mrs. H. J. Miller, and her sister, Mrs. Joseph L. Moloney.

Miss Helen Coffey, 3815 North Pennsylvania street, will be hostess at 2:30 tomorrow for a meeting of Alpha Lambda. E. C. Belzer will describe "The Romance of Communication. Assistant hostesses will be Mrs. William Albershard and Mrs. Robert Horn.

Mrs. Pearl Hostess

Five hundred section, Hoosier Athletic club, will meet at 2 tomorrow with Mrs. William H. Pearl as hostess. A Christmas party will be planned.

'Mr. Robert,' Ayres Beauty Advisor, Served Women Who Attended Coronation

Worked Throughout Night Preceding Crowning of Edward VII; Advocates Enhancing Natural Lines.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

THE night preceding the coronation of King Edward VII as ruler of Great Britain, "Mr. Robert," advisor in the beauty salon at L. S. Ayres, working until morning dressing the hair of women of the court. His work at that time meant styles suitable for tiaras of such precious stones that they really were "the ransom of kings."

Today he gives personal direction to the hair dressing, make-up, and all of the arts of beauty for Indianapolis women, and finds it just as interesting.

He knows just the way each individual hair should be placed in a coiffure to give the greatest charm to the face; he can examine features and prescribe just the correct curve for the eyebrows, the texture of powder which should be used, and the shade of rouge, lipstick and eye shadow. Not only is he able to make this selection for his patrons, but he is able to explain to them why such a selection is wise, and how they should use it.

"The greatest charm lies in natural beauty," he reiterates, as he suggests natural hair lines, not too vivid rouge, and a disregard for extreme styles.

Much of his advice is the result of patient study and observation. "Place the rouge here," he advises a customer, touching the cheek close to the temple. "Did you ever notice a healthy child's color? That is where you will find it; therefore, it is the natural way to use rouge."

Left School to Take Up Calling

"MR. ROBERT" was the last son of a physician. Like his brothers, he was sent to school with plans to study medicine or one of the other professions.

Near his home lived a family whose children were awkward, gawky, youngsters. Suddenly one of the boys disappeared. When "Mr. Robert" was a 14-year-old boy, in school, he met a well-dressed man on the street, and recognized him as the ungainly youth who had run away.

From France, "Mr. Robert" went to Germany. Later he went to London, where he did work for members of the various families of nobility.

Places Much Stress on Color

IN all of his work, he has been anxious to emphasize the importance of color.

"I like to work with color in any way," he explains, as he stirs portions of tinted powders together to make a mixture for an individual customer. "Each skin is different, and it takes care to select the blend which suits it. When I have finished making the individual blend of powder for a customer, I enclose a small sample of it in an envelope."

"This is fastened to a card, bearing the name of the customer, and giving the proportions of different shades of powders I have used in the blending. Then when she comes in for a new supply, the attendant can fill her order, just as a prescription clerk in a pharmacy can refill a prescription for medicine."
