CITY RESIDENT COMPLAINS OF SEWAGE ODOR

State Department Asked to Investigate: News of Hunters Given.

BY LEFTY LEE
Times Herald Editor

Here is a letter from H. O. Keeler, 940 West Fifty-third street, that tells of a terrible condition from the sewer that enters White river at Capitol avenue. The letter reads as follows:

"The sewer at Capitol avenue and White river, back of the Riviera Club, always has been bad, but now it is throwing a stream of raw sewage into the river that is ruining the fishing and boating as far downstream as Northwestern avenue."

"This sewage is of the worst type, with a terrible odor and is depositing a mass of filthy solids on the river bottom that soon will make this once nice section of the river comparable to the stretch of river below the Kings & Co. plant. The conservation department has been doing a wonderful job of cleaning up the streams of the state and they should investigate the condition at this point. Citizens in this section are determined to put a stop to the condition, and if they can not secure action from the state board of health, they will file civil suits."

The people of southern Indiana were reported to be hostile toward Warden Elliott because he shot and killed an alleged hog violator. Even though the young man was a cripple I think that the warden was fully justified in protecting his own life. The fact that the hunter did not have a license to hunt may have been his only reason to try to escape but we never have heard of a bullet being crippled even if the person handling the gun and shooting at another person was. The warden, according to reports, was in full uniform when he ordered the hunter to show his permit to even have a gun so that removes the alibi of thinking that he was being held up. Warden Elliott has proved himself to be a hard working officer doing his duty at all times and the sportsmen of the state should get behind him 100 per cent. The same citizens who have turned against the warden since the unfortunate happening were the ones who commended him to his superiors when he captured a quail trapper two weeks ago.

The shades of Buffalo Bill, recumbent since the passing of the thundering herd, rides again, this time in Canada, where the buffalo has been increasing so rapidly that the Canadian government authorized the killing of 2,000 last month and during December. The slaughter is necessary by lack of grazing facilities to supply the large number of bison with food. In 1910 a total of 716 buffalo, secured from remnants of the vast herds that once roamed the United States, were delivered to Canadian authorities. Of this number 631 were placed in Buffalo National park, near Wainwright, Alberta, and the remainder in Elk Island park, near Lamont, Alberta. An additional 117 animals were introduced subsequently to Buffalo park from other sources. Since that time both herds have registered tremendous gains with the proper food, environment and control of predatory species necessary to successful restoration of any game birds or animals. In Buffalo park alone, the original 748 animals have increased to 23,000.

Various measures have been taken to reduce the constantly growing size of the herds. Several years ago 6,673 buffalo were shipped to the Northwest territory and some 5,500 head have been slaughtered. Others have been donated to zoological parks. Still the animals have increased and now Canada has resorted to annual killing to keep its stock within bounds. What Canada has accomplished with the buffalo, which reproduces at the rate of one calf a year, teaches a conservation parable. If sportsmen will supply our prolific small game species, which reproduce at ten times that rate, with the proper food, environment and control of their natural enemies, results are sure to be startling.

The Jamison Balt Company added two more prizes to The Times fishing contest. Two of the baits were sent to Sam Kirazian for catching the first prize large mouth bass, with one of the baits.

Hunters were out in force Thanksgiving and the game was in for a hard day. Rabbits are plentiful this year and some good sport can be had in almost any section of the state.

Owing to the fact that the conservation department was closed Thanksgiving day, the regular weekly report from the wardens of the state will not appear this week.
