

Culver Polo Team Loses to Franklin

Fred Sharp, State Horse Association Leader, Is Jubilant.

Times Woman's Page Editor

FRED SHARP of Franklin, who became better known to Indianapolis during the recent saddle horse round-up, is elated today. His polo team from the Franklin Polo and Saddle Club beat the Culver military academy team 10-9 in yesterday's match after a 11-6 defeat Saturday.

Culver team's record makes the victory important to the Franklin players. Last year the undefeated cadets won the international championship in New York. They met and downed foreign teams and championship players from all parts of the country to gain the championship.

The matches last week-end opened the academy's winter season of indoor polo. The invitation to the Franklin team to take part in the opening came as a result of the round-up when Brigadier-General Gignilliat, academy commandant, sent several horsemen to participate. In the polo matches at the round-up the Franklin players defeated all its opponents.

Mr. Sharp referred the week-end games in the academy riding hall, which is the second largest indoor riding pavilion in the United States. Mounted on the academy ponies, the Franklin players were at a disadvantage during the first match, but they soon handled the strange ponies as adeptly as their own.

Holiday Brings Crowd

Ray Adams, Lester Canary, Harry George, Claude Barnum and Currie McQuinn, who learned the game under Mr. Sharp's training played before a holiday crowd of visitors, parents and friends who had come to spend Thanksgiving with cadets.

"We really didn't expect to win, for the cadet team draws its lineup from forty candidates, who practice an hour every day and play outside teams every week-end," he said.

The academy varsity team was composed of seniors, playing their fourth year of polo. They included Cadets Lampton, Owen, Runk, Vorhes, Fay and Brown, instructed by Sergeant Stone.

Another Team Proposed

The Franklin and Ft. Harrison teams are the only groups in this vicinity which play indoor polo. During the state fair the two teams played exhibition matches in the coliseum with Culver alumni providing competition. Algonquin Riding Club is contemplating formation of an indoor team.

Mr. Sharp and his players were guests of the academy officers for the week-end, and attended the special Saturday night show, presented in the school gymnasium.

Mr. Sharp, one of the directors of the Indiana Saddle Horse Association, was active in preparations for the first round-up this fall, and his team has played frequently at the Rolling Ridge Polo Club field.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Which would you rather be—a dependent or an independent wife? Write your views on this subject to Jane Jordan and read her comments in this column.

Dear Jane Jordan—I agree with you that wifely virtues have been overestimated, but I wish to shout from the housetops that wifely burdens are grossly underestimated. I feel that the reason wives become narrow and utterly absorbed in their husbands, children and home is due to a system of society which decrees that "a woman's place is in the home," and refuses a married woman of just average ability a chance to get part or full time work so that she can broaden her interests. If a woman with outstanding talent and ability does get such work, the husband is apt to wait that he is neglected, especially if there are children to further divide her interests. Then he goes off on the hunt for the "other woman" to fill his needs, just as surely as when he feels too dominated or bored by a domestic wife. Often it is the wife who has a profound need for a little separateness to offset the monotonous and drudgery of never ending housework and children. But usually she has no hope of finding an outlet other than through complexes, neuroses and domineering behavior. The most monotonous of work is not so tedious to the spirit as the duties of a wife and mother without a maid. The former has an eight-hour job, whereas the housewife has a fourteen-hour job, subject to calls from the children in the night. No matter how much one loves one's children, they are nerve-racking if they are under foot incessantly. There! It's good to get that off my chest!

A Dull Housewife

Answer—You're not so dull, in my opinion. You're fully conscious of the obstacles in the way of your personal development and are in rebellion against them. This is considerably more interesting than a state of cowlike animality. As long as books and magazines are available you won't go completely stale. My quarrel is with the wife who thinks she is God's chosen creature by virtue of her wedded estate. She feels that the mere legality of marriage is sufficient to guarantee her husband's devotion as long as they both shall live. Your graphic account of the housewife's plight in a servantless home is absolutely true. Shaw once described the patriarchal home as the "girl's prison and the woman's workhouse." More and more women are extricating themselves from the role which tradition has assigned to them, in search of personal independence and more stimulating pursuits.

Every emotionally healthy mother admits that there are times when the most beloved child is an unmitigated nuisance. Usually she feels a horrid sense of guilt and secretly condemns herself as an unnatural mother. It only means that her children have a better chance for normal emotional growth than the ones who are stunted by a too-fond maternal devotion. Again I am in perfect agreement with you that work outside the home by no means solves woman's problem, though I think it is better than a lifetime of servitude to dustpan and broom. The working wife and mother only substitute a brand new set of problems for the old ones. The conflicting claims of love and work are just as hard to settle as the griefs of dependence and domestic servitude.

If a woman devotes too much time and energy to her profession, she may depreciate the importance of mating and maternity. If she puts the emphasis on the role of wife and mother, she has less energy to devote to personal success. A nice adjustment between the two is hard to make.

The jealousy of the spouse is another factor with which the wage earning wife may have to contend, though I think that the difficulties of the depression have made men less scornful of accepting pecuniary aid from their wives. Even so the less intelligent males do quite a little inappropriate whining while permitting their wives to carry the double role of wage earner and home-maker.

In spite of these drawbacks, the economically independent wife still has many very real advantages. For one thing, her aggressive instincts usually are worked off on the job, leaving her with less need to take out her managerial instincts on her husband and children.

Her contacts with men in business teach her that her husband isn't the only man on the planet, and if he washes out on her she isn't sunk. For one thing her work makes such heavy demands on her that domestic disaster diminishes in importance. At least her whole world doesn't crash with her husband's fall from grace.

Have a Hobby

Artistic Efforts Enrich Life of Muncie Woman

child. To snap such a scene with a camera would have been an indignity, but Mrs. Marsh sketched the simple pathos of the native tragedy, adding an unusual scene to the log of her Mexican visit.

Mrs. Marsh's hobby is photography, and on journeys he snaps the scenes which Mrs. Marsh hasn't time to sketch. On returning home they make a log in book form, illustrated with photographs and sketches, the cover being a water color of the most beautiful view. For her present project, Mrs. Marsh is preserving on canvas the picturesque old churches near Muncie. She has completed sketching the one which stands in the small community called Orange. Fortunately, it was painted before the trees, which added to the beauty of its setting, were cut down.

Those who have had the privilege of visiting Mrs. Marsh in her studio, enjoying her paintings, and seeing the happiness and satisfaction she obtains from this fascinating word, realize that to her a hobby has paid attractive dividends of recreation and creative enjoyment.

THE Indiana Artists' second annual exhibition opening today at the L. S. Ayres & Co. store and the Indiana Artists' Club showing throughout December at the Spink Arms should be inspirational material for those interested in art as a hobby.

The Art Association of Indianapolis offers as one of the privileges of membership the opportunity to study sketching in a class conducted by Wilbur D. Peat, director of the John Heron Art Institute.

The class meets every Wednesday night at the museum and the object merely is self expression and enjoyment. The project was launched three years ago upon the theory that the layman would enjoy sketching under competent supervision. It is not a training school; only sufficient instruction is given to enable the hand and eye accurately to register impressions.

The class sometimes numbers forty members who often continue together during the summer. Their summer activities consist of sketching trips to city parks and other points of scenic beauty.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Burns and Miss Margaret Shipp are among the enthusiasts who have continued together during the summer. Their summer activities consist of sketching trips to city parks and other points of scenic beauty.

Possibly among these hobby lovers may be discovered a "Christopher Bean." However for the present, by yielding to the latent yearning to sketch, they have opened for themselves the door into a wonderful new world of form and color; they have an awakened interest in nature and a pleasant pastime for leisure hours.
