

Tea Habit Gaining in City Favor

Custom's Growth Shown in Accommodations Clubs Provide.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN,
Times Woman's Page Editor

WHETHER you spend your afternoons riding horseback, playing bridge or at business desks, there's a convenient, restful place to drop in for tea. Several clubs have realized appeal of the tea hour, and have designated hours for informal gatherings before dinner.

After the Saturday and Sunday afternoon rides at Bob Brown's riding stables, formerly the Arlington stables, Mrs. Margaret Abram Peore is hostess for tea. The clubhouse living room, with its fireplace, is the inviting center for these informal gatherings.

Mrs. Peore is hostess and riding instructor at the club. Mr. and Mrs. Alex Metzger are regular guests, and join other riders, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hoke, Mr. and Mrs. William Wenner, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Test and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred L. Piel.

After strenuous games of bridge at the Little Knickerbocker Club, Mrs. Kay Coffin, hostess, serves tea to guests. Husbands, returning from work to join their wives, drop in as well as men who play regularly at the club.

Various Junior League members are putting finishing touches on handwork in preparation for the annual arts and interests exhibition of members' work to be held at a tea next Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Frederick T. Holliday, Sunset Lane.

Mrs. Stanley Shippes, vice-chairman of the arts and interests committee, is gathering entries which will include paintings, sculpturing and handicrafts. A variety of articles made in the league's occupational therapy shop at Riley hospital will be included in the handcraft division.

Miss Blanche Stillson and Wilbur D. Peat of the John Herron Art Institute will judge the entries for awards of ribbons. The show comes shortly before the regional exhibition, Nov. 29 to 31 in Kansas City, and winners in the local show will be entered in divisional competition. Awards in the regional show make entries eligible for national competition at the spring meeting in Montreal.

Provisional members will be presented formally at the tea. These members who have completed the league's required training course are ready for active membership and have chosen the branch of activity in which they wish to participate.

New Workers Announced

One group has chosen to work at the Riley hospital occupational therapy shop. These members are Mrs. Wells Hampton, Mrs. John K. Ruckelshaus, Mrs. Robert Hare, Miss Joanne Disette, Miss Lois Graham and Miss Dorothy DuPuy.

The league shop will have new workers, Mrs. William M. Wilson, Mrs. Courland Van Camp, Mrs. Mary Booth Jameson, Miss Betty Bertermann and Miss Evelyn Chambers.

Several hours a week will be spent at the Trading Post by Mrs. Woods A. Caperton Jr., Mrs. James Collins, Miss Elsie Sinclair and Miss Jane Rowley.

During the afternoon at the tea the League Glee Club will sing under the direction of Edward LaSelle and Mrs. Paul Fisher, chairman. Miss Rosamond Van Camp is chairman of the arts and interests division of the league.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Jane Jordan will answer questions about love, marriage, child training and business troubles in this column. Every one is invited to join in the discussions. If you have an idea or an experience to contribute, write now.

Dear Jane Jordan—I wonder whether or not love can be anything more than a mere physical relationship. In the primitive sense it certainly is no more than just that. Perhaps we have been making more out of love than we should. I don't know. I'm asking you. A READER.

Answer—It is a favorite pose of our times to interpret love in physical terms. It is true that primitive peoples did not know love, but man has come a long way in emotional development since then, and somewhere between savagery and civilization, love was born. I think it is John Dewey who says that romantic love is as much a product of civilization as battle-ships.

The human being has created new needs for himself which he can not ignore without disaster. The love hunger now includes certain intellectual and emotional requirements in addition to instinctual satisfaction. Those who fail to synchronize the three elements of love in one object are apt to succumb to a feeling of futility and unfulfillment.

The need for self-communication, the craving of sympathetic companionship, the desire to share the experiences of life with a beloved partner, are part and parcel of the demands of modern love. While physical union is not to be underestimated, it becomes an empty experience when divorced from the other components of love.

Some of our writers speak of love as if it were some sort of an obscure joke, a prank of nature played on helpless humanity. Held in bondage by a craving which they neither can respect or escape, they take refuge in cynical denials of its value.

In truth, love is one of the adornments of life. He who never has shared a sunset with a beloved person, who never has met another's eyes across a room full of people in secret understanding, who never has known the rapport of two compatible minds, has missed one of the most complete escapes from the tragic loneliness of life.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am going to tell you the solid truth and believe me you are the first to hear it. To begin with there are two of all so often I can see they are much beneath my husband. I even like for them to see me with my husband. I want to strut him past them and I think, "Look him over; he is mine!" And you thought I should be flattered with your love making! Can you figure out this one? LOST.

Answer—There are some people who are so adventurous that they never are happy unless they are flirting with danger. We see men enlisting in foreign wars for the thrill of risking their lives. Those who are unfitted temperamentally for the humdrum routine existence will fly over the poles, climb Mt. Everest, swim the Hellespont, and otherwise expose themselves to danger for the sake of excitement.

Perhaps you are one of those adventurous souls who rebel against safety, and you find a happy marriage too tame for your taste. It is true that even the happiest marriage loses its edge under the dulling effect of time and familiarity, and leaves a desire for the storm of passion in the hearts of some of the most devoted partners. My guess is that your love affairs are the most readily available outlet for a restless nature that feeds upon thrills.

You do not approve of yourself, however, nor should you. Playing with fire is sure to get you into trouble some day. You must remember that you not only risk yourself, but the welfare of one who is very dear to you. I suggest that you find some socially acceptable activity to stake your thirst for adventure. You might take up flying, or pursue some hazardous profession. Anything would be preferable to wrecking the faith of the man upon whom your real happiness depends.

Block's Offers Liquid to Make Various Fabrics Resist Water and Spots

Izen Also Recommended to Guard Against Harm From Perspiration; Ayres' Patrons View Two Interesting Exhibits.

BY HELEN LINDSAY.

A NEW solution, for waterproofing dresses and other materials, is being shown by the William H. Block Company. It is Izen, a colorless, odorless non-explosive liquid, which when applied to fabrics renders them water-proof, spot-proof and perspiration-proof.

The preparation is recommended for use on dresses, hats, ties, hose, window and shower curtains. In addition to making the fabrics water-proof, the manufacturers believe the liquid will prolong the wearing qualities of the materials upon which it is used.

Dresses and hose can be submerged in it. When the liquid dries the fabric is waterproof. Izen is harmless to the skin.

Wasson's Offers New Drink Device

THE "Go-Where-You-Go" shaker is a new top which will fit any glass, making a beverage mixer. It is lined with cork around the sides, and when placed over the top of a glass and given a slight twist to one side, fits tightly. When the beverage has been thoroughly mixed by shaking the glass, the cap on the shaker top is removed, and the drink can then be poured through the strainer spout. It is one of the new drinking gadgets seen at H. P. Wasson & Co.

Ayres' Shows Sculptured Hands

TWO interesting exhibits are shown on the first floor of the L. S. Ayres store this week. One is the display of sculptured reproductions of hands of famous persons, made by Helen Liedloff, and formerly exhibited at a Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago. In the collection are the hands of Sergei Rachmaninoff, Vincent Richards, Professor Albert Einstein, Ely Culbertson, Joseph P. Day, Lily Pons, Eleanor Smith, F. D. Waterman, Bobby Jones, Amelia Earhart Putnam, Rudy Vallee and Bob Bartlett.

The figures were a part of the Waterman pen exhibit at the fair, and were brought here under the auspices of the Waterman Pen Company. Miss Liedloff modeled the hands from life.

With the collection by Miss Liedloff is shown a mask of the face of Hale MacKeen, and sculptured reproductions of his hands. Mr. MacKeen is director of the Civic Theater in Indianapolis, and the impressions for the mask and the hands representing him were made by Jean Orloff, of the Orloff trio.

Character Reading Device Attracts

THE other exhibit at Ayres which is attracting the attention of patrons this week is the "Grapholog," a small machine through the use of which character and personal ability is said to be determined by individual handwriting.

Examples of noted persons' handwriting is shown on a scroll, which can be wound up, showing through a window-slit in the top of the machine. Beside this an example of the individual's own handwriting is to be written.

Charts with the writing show points upon which it is to be compared with that of well known persons. The comparison is intended to show characteristics, and acquaint the individual with the vocation for which he is fitted.

J. Holbert Byram, who is in charge of the exhibit of the grapholog, has made a study of graphology for fifteen years. He has used the study in personnel work, criminal detection, and suits dealing with the contents of wills.
