

Old Gamble Gave World Valentines

Names of Maids Drawn From Urn in Early Observances.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN,

VALENTINE motifs would lead us to believe that this fellow, St. Valentine, was a romantic blade of days gone by. Winged Cupid with his bow and arrow, we know as the god of love, son of Venus. There can be no mistake about the significance of lacy hearts with romantic verses.

History sets us right on our ideas of St. Valentine, who actually was a pious clergyman without the least semblance of romance in his life. Because the early Christian fathers didn't approve of celebrating the feast of Lupericalia, they tried to steer the attention of their young men and women to paying tribute to the saints.

The feast was first celebrated by placing names of marriageable young women into a "love urn," and each young man, blindfolded, drew out the name of the maiden destined to be his sweetheart.

The Christian fathers objected to this method of choosing wives. They tried to do away with the custom by substituting names of saints in the urns, with the men paying tribute at the shrine of the saint whose name they drew. They called Feb. 14 St. Valentine's day in honor of the good clergyman.

The marriage lotteries continued and the mates chosen in this manner were called Valentines. And so today we imagined that St. Valentine was an early gallant who set maidens' hearts aflutter.

W. Karl Steele was successful yesterday in justifying his feeling of the close relationship of music and art. While he drew in pastel a sunrise at a tea given by Mrs. Karl T. Nessler and Mrs. Harold M. Reeves, Mrs. Nessler accompanied him on the harp.

We watched him breathlessly as his hands moved rhythmically over the canvas splashing color here and there. Soft, gay strains of the music were transmitted into light colors on the canvas. A dramatic crowd provoked the drawing of a gamut of tree trunk against the sky.

As the hostess played "The World Is Waiting for the Sunrise," we watched the young art student put on the last touches of color of the sunrise. Then the artist, with lights he himself arranged above his easel, flashed various colors over the pastel, giving an effect of breaking day.

Mrs. Benjamin Turner Jr. and Mrs. Robert Winslow poured at the tea, given for the benefit of the Wesleyan college scholarship fund. Mrs. Winslow and Miss Elizabeth Hurd, another guest, both had heard Rockwell Kent in the Town Hall lecture in the morning.

Mrs. E. T. Nicholson came with her mother, Mrs. Crawford, and her sister, Miss Jean Crawford, who recently arrived from Los Angeles. Mrs. Howard Stanton came with her daughter, Mrs. Turner.

Other guests included Mrs. Frederic Bastian, Mrs. Willits Bastian, Mrs. Paul Moffett, Mrs. Earl C. Gouldman, Mrs. William S. Horn and Mrs. Russell Smith.
