

Women Get Little Job Giving Aid

Only 5 Per Cent Share in Work Provided by Government.

BY GRETTA PALMER
Times Special Writer

NEW YORK, March 3.—The federal government, in its laudable efforts to stimulate employment and create job relief has employed more than 500,000 in civil conservation camps and four or five millions more on civil and public works projects. States and cities have likewise employed millions. The employment of women on the various projects is negligible. It is estimated by experts to be less than 5 per cent.

Miss Palmer

This is an excerpt from a recent speech by Edward C. Rybicki, director of the New York City council on economics and former director of the city free employment agency.

If you care to spend a few happy hours with the population records—a n d remember your long division—you will eventually find that women constitute 22.7 per cent of the working population of the country in ordinary times. And on this 22.7 per cent the burden of the depression has rested most heavily of all.

Many firms have admittedly discharged their women workers as soon as the men on the theory that the latter were "heads of families." So that probably a great many more than 22.7 of the unemployed workers today are women.

And they are getting less than 5 per cent of the work relief.

This brings us smack up against the curious brainstrom which seems to overtake the mind of employer and social worker alike when there is a question of giving precedence, in work or charity, to the head of a family. For it is often the single man can shift pretty well for himself but that you can not refuse help to a married man for fear his wife would starve.

Single Women Starve, Too

Well, single women can starve just as rapidly as wives. Don't they get any share of this chivalrous insistence on saving the women and children first?

Apparently they don't. They have had to yield first place on relief lists to the heads of families, in spite of the fact that a lonely, roaming woman is potentially a far greater social menace than a roaming man and wife.

They have not even received such consideration as was given to the single men in the form of the nation-wide civilian conservation corps. Yet there may be projects of as great importance to the state as even reforestation which lie well within the boundary of their physical abilities.

Could Make Clothing

They might, perhaps, even be attached as an auxiliary to the reforestation program, now that the government has started the laudable project of undoing the mistakes of our heedless forebears. They might run hatcheries to restock the nation's streams with fish. They might work on gigantic game bird farms, replacing the plover and pheasant and grouse, which are almost forgotten fare on the American table.

They might take over a clothing factory and supply from the uniforms worn by the army and navy, as well as those handed out to workers on government-made jobs and probably save a pretty penny to the state as well.

There is plenty of work that the women could do to bring their quota of made jobs up to the 22.7 per cent, which seems, from every social and humanitarian point of view, to be their due.

Will Miss Frances Perkins please put in a word for them? Or Mrs. Roosevelt? Or any other woman who has the ear of those who apportion of the federal relief?
