

THROUGH WITH POLITICS, SAYS MRS. HOLLEY

I've Had Enough, Woman Sheriff States; Will Finish Term.

By United Press CROWN POINT, Ind., March 6.—Sheriff Lillian Holley, from whose jail John Dillinger walked, waving a ridiculous little wooden revolver, is going to retire to a farm and away from killers and gangsters.

"But I'm not a quitter," she hastened to add as she talked, tired and almost weeping, to the United Press today in the Crown Point jail from which she vowed not many days ago that Dillinger never would escape.

"I'll finish my term. I've got to do that. But I'll step out of office and out of politics next January for good. I've had enough."

As she talked deputies and state's attorney's investigators brought her reports of the progress of the man hunt, but she waved them aside as she was told that there was no real clue to the whereabouts of the desperado and Herbert Youngblood, Negro murder suspect who accompanied Dillinger.

Not Getting Anywhere

"We're not getting anywhere, but I don't know what more we can do," she said. "I've tried, tried desperately, to find out who is at fault for this terrible thing, but my efforts haven't accounted for much. I guess we are all to blame."

Wand and talking in a hoarse whisper, the comely 43-year-old sheriff who pinned her husband's star upon herself a year ago when her husband was shot down by a criminal, spoke of her 18-year-old daughters who are attending school in the east.

"It's hard on them," she reflected. "They probably are reading all about this and about their mother who promised that John Dillinger never would break from jail."

Sheriff Holley's voice took on a firmer tone when she talked of Dillinger himself.

I'd Kill Him If I Could

"If I only knew where to look for that man. I wouldn't be afraid to shoot it out with him. I'd kill him if I could. All I want is the chance."

People must think I am awfully inefficient and I can imagine what most men are saying about a woman sheriff who let John Dillinger escape in such a manner. You're probably saying it's a man's job, and I guess now that it is."

"Anyway, the next sheriff of this county will be a man. My husband was a real sheriff and I so wanted to make good for his sake. You know, it was his job—not mine—that I was carrying on."

"I enjoyed being Indiana's only woman sheriff, but I'm through now. When my term is up I am going to retire to the farm my husband left me. Some one else can have the job."

PROGRAM OF MOTHER CARE TO BE STARTED

CRAWFORDSVILLE, March 6.—Carlton Gauld, Crawfordsville singer, a basso, is winning high praise in Paris, France, where he is appearing in "Pelleas and Melisande," singing the role of Goland. He has been a member of the Opera Comique Company several years.

Clippings from newspapers received here by the singer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Gauld, speak highly of his ability.

"Mr. Gauld's conception of Goland is characterized by remarkable maturity of comprehension and by an impressive simplicity," according to the Paris edition of the London Daily Mail.

The Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune said:

"The authority and finish with which Carlton Gauld carried the part of Goland was further proof—if further proof were needed—of this artist's command of character, text and voice."

Hurt by Own Leg

By Times Special

BRAZIL, March 6.—Injured by an artificial leg he is using, Everett M. Miller has filed suit in Clay circuit court seeking $10,400 damages from the Pennsylvania railroad.

Complaint recites that a truck driven by Mr. Miller became stalled Aug. 13, 1933, on a crossing and that he jumped from the machine as a train approached. He states that bones of the leg stump were forced through the flesh when he landed on the artificial limb, inflicting injuries, which he asserts, are permanent.

He seeks $10,000 for the injuries and $400 for the truck, which was demolished when struck by the train.

INSULL WINS 2-DAY RESPIRE, PLEADS FOR NEW EXAMINATION

By United Press

ATHENS, March 6.—Samuel Insull won a respite today from an expulsion order and will be re-examined by specialists to determine his fitness for travel.

Insull, aged Chicago utilities magnate facing trial in federal court if the United States can extradite him, suffered a heart and nervous collapse when a police official visited him to extend his two days and gave him Greek traveling papers.

On the advice of his lawyer, Insull asked for a re-examination as to his fitness to travel and Interior Minister John Rallos appointed Professor Bensis and Liniator of the university to make the examination. Insull said he was willing for a representative of the American legation to attend.
