IN SHERIFF RACE

FARMER, 72, IS RE-INDICTED IN SON'S MURDER

State Police Revive Case Against J. P. Taylor of Pike County.

Indiana state police were being credited today with investigations which led to a second indictment of John Phil Taylor, 72, Pike county farmer, charged with the shotgun murder of his son.

Taylor is a friend of Judge John L. Summer of the Pike and Dubois court, who found flaws in the first indictment and who is alleged to have sought to avert the second.

Judge Summer was appointed to the bench at Petersburg by former Governor Harry G. Leslie and then was elected to the post. He is a Democrat.

Shooting Followed Card Game

Prosecutor Louis A. Savage, who asked that state police aid in investigation of the murder, is a Democrat.

According to Inspector Vernon Shields and detective Claude Dozier of the state police, Taylor, who had been drinking, is alleged to have shot his son, Beaver Taylor, 40, following a card game.

When killed, the son was seated on a bed in his home, his wife, Mrs. Plena Taylor, and her brother, Louis Stillwell, being in the room.

A neighbor, Leo Dearing, is said to have found the elder Taylor in the yard armed with the shot gun and shouting:

"Old John is a hoss!"

Taylor is then said to have told Mr. Dearing that he killed his son and said:

Nephew Named Accessory

"He asked for it, so I let him have it. He told me I was a coward if I didn't."

Later the elder Taylor is said to have gone to the home of a nephew, Everett McIlere, who has been indicted as accessory after the fact.

Neither the wife nor brother-in-law actually saw the shot fired, it was said, but they are said to have asserted that before he died, the younger Taylor exclaimed:

"Dad shot me."
