Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

If you have some questions you want answered by an impartial outsider, put them in a letter to Jane Jordan. The questions below are asked by women. The husbands are invited to send in their answers next.

Dear Jane Jordan—During a little family conversation a heated argument started concerning the following questions. The topic also has been debated among our friends. These questions come from a group of people who married young, between 15 and 20, and who can't seem to get settled and properly adjusted to each other's ways.

1. Should marriage be a 50-50 proposition?

Answer—Yes. Marriage is a job of co-operation between two people. Co-operation is not possible where one partner dictates and the other obeys.

2. Should a man go as he pleases and then dictate to his wife where, when and with whom she shall go?

Answer—No. It shows that the man is interested only in himself and does not wish to contribute anything to the happiness of his partner. This is not co-operation. It is a dictatorship. Such a man is not prepared for marriage. He has an infantile idea of his own importance.

3. Should a man expect his wife to give up all previous friendships (for purely selfish motives or petty dislikes) and yet retain his own friendships?

Answer—No. This attitude argues that the man is not fundamentally interested in other people, not even his wife. He is concerned only with himself and the people who cater to his own sense of importance. The only reliable basis for a happy marriage is that each partner be more interested in the other than himself.

4. If husband or wife should have a violent dislike for her in-laws, would he or she be a hypocrite to treat them at least with consideration, instead of being downright insulting?

Answer—Civilized people do not insult each other no matter what they feel. A socialized individual learns to adapt himself to others of his own kind and to associate with them without mutual annoyance. He who feels the urge to insult those who are not in agreement with him, reveals himself as an egoistic infant who has never progressed beyond those early years when the child is not aware of any rights apart from his own.

5. Most of these couples have enough children to look after. Should the wife depend upon her husband for money. How should this be managed?

Answer—The wife should have a definite allowance for the house-keeping and for her own needs. She should not be accountable to her husband for the way she spends it if she is at all reasonable.

6. If the husband goes out by himself at night and enjoys himself (drinking, etc.) how should his wife like it? By that I mean should she be allowed her night out, or be told, "Well you have children to look after." Should she wait until she is too old to enjoy herself before she has time to do so?

Answer—Both husband and wife have a right to some free time away from each other and away from their children. It is a safeguard against that deadly enemy of marriage—ennui. But where a man leaves his wife tied to her post, without thought for her pleasure, in order to escape his responsibilities in drink and careless revelry, she may as well face the fact that he has lost interest in her.

No woman can accept the role of inferiority, wherein her rights are ignored by a self-centered husband, without anger and disgust. Where comrades are equals, they will always find a way to arbitrate their differences. The marriage of dictator and domestic is always unhappy.

7. Do you believe in birth control?

Answer—Yes. Note—These questions are quite obviously asked by the wives in the case. The husbands are requested to come back with their side of the story.

Dear Jane Jordan—My husband and I were very happy until about a year ago when he started drinking. He drank some before but not much and I didn't care. But now when he gets drunk he causes a stir in the household which we never had before. Maybe I'm jealous of his drinking. I hate to think of his letting anything take his time and money as drink does.

We have two dear little girls. Any more I can not stand to see him drink, and simply hate him when he does. At other times I love him more than anything in the world. He is in hot water now, so deep that he wants to sell the car which is one of the few pleasures I have. Sometimes I think he drinks to forget his money troubles, but it only makes matters worse. I have begged and pleaded with him to stop. I was nice about it, then mean, then indifferent. Nothing matters any more. Please tell me how I can get him to stop.

SO WORRIED
Answer—You can't do anything for him. The desire to stop must come from within himself. It is obvious that the man drinks to avoid responsibility. He can't be helped until he is willing to accept the responsibilities which he has incurred and cope with them. As it is he thinks only of flight when he is under pressure.

Reality is not to his liking. Hence his attempt to find some cozy retreat of his own closer to the heart's desire. Alcohol blurs the sharp edges of reality. The drunk man no longer cares. He loses his painful sense of inadequacy for the nonce. It's a temporary escape, to be sure, but one that he seeks again and again in preference to the tougher task of proving himself master of his difficulties.

Dear Jane Jordan—I'm having a little trouble with the boy I'm going with. He is 20 and I am 17. He doesn't want to go to church with me on Sunday nights, and that doesn't go so good with my mother, and I don't like to go with any one like that. What shall I do when he doesn't want to go to church? About the fourth week he stood me up. I would just sit home and wait on him. That's where I did wrong, I guess. Other boys ask me for dates, but I always refuse.

Answer—You would be wise to go with other boys. Any girl is foolish to cling to a boy who forgets his date with her. It is an infallible indication that he isn't much interested. I do not think any boy should be required to become a church-goer to please a young lady. It would be wiser for you to choose your boy friend from the ranks of those who attend church because they want to.

Extend Beauty Treatment to Feet, Is Advice of Jane Cloud, Cosmetician

Prepares Special Cream and Gives Directions for Exercises; Products Offered by Charles Mayer.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

SOME lines in women's faces may be caused by eyestrain; some by worry, and some by age. But Jane Cloud, young and modern cosmetician, believes that many of them are caused by what the imitator Will Rogers characterized in one of his pictures as "hurty feet."

Because she is convinced that it is impossible for a woman to appear at her best unless she has foot comfort, Jane Cloud has been the first of the manufacturers of toilet preparations to create a cream for the feet. In addition to this, she has prepared a series of foot exercises which she incloses in a pamphlet with this unique cream. According to Miss Cloud, it is just as necessary to give your feet a "daily dozen" as it is to bend and stretch to retain a girlish figure.

The exercises which Miss Cloud recommends are those which are taught in her exclusive salons in New York and Easthampton, L. I. She contends that "toe exercises" can be taken similar to those which a musician uses for his fingers. And every morning, she suggests, the woman who wants to have lovely feet should walk around her bedroom on the outer edges of her feet, with the toes curled under.

Visitors at the fashionable summer colony at Easthampton last June admired Miss Cloud's slender, graceful beauty. In addition, they marveled at the beauty of her own bare feet, showing through summer sports sandals. And Miss Cloud insists that any woman can have feet which will appear well in beach or sports sandals if she takes the same care of her feet as she does of her hands and face. Jane Cloud taught physical education in the Knox School for Girls at Cooperstown, N. Y., one of the most fashionable girls' schools in the east. Following that experience, she studied bone structure in one of the larger orthopedic hospitals in the east. It was there that she concluded that women's beauty treatments should include the feet.

Offered Exclusively by Mayer's
The salon in Easthampton is one of the most attractive sites in the town. It is situated among a row of attractive buildings in the design of rustic English shops. On the window, trade-marking the owner's name in a clever way, is a reproduction of a realistic-looking, misty cloud. The wall paper is a Japanese design, showing pastel pink and blue morning glories. The woodwork is of a darker shade of blue.

The salon was opened in June and in November Miss Cloud opened her New York establishment. The Jane Cloud preparations are being shown now in various stores throughout the country. In Indianapolis, they are exclusive with Charles Mayer.

According to a representative of the New York salon in Indianapolis last week, Miss Cloud herself is one of her own best customers. "She takes excellent care of her own personal appearance," she said, pointing to a picture of a slender, tall figure, in becoming costume. "Often, after the salon is closed, she remains, exercising to keep her weight where she thinks it should be. She fights an extra pound of flesh at its first appearance."

All Movie Styles Not Acceptable
WARNING against the acceptance of all styles shown in motion pictures has been issued to American women by Travis Banton, creator of fashions at the Paramount studios.

"It is essential that would-be purchasers of ready-to-wear garments be careful in the selection of screen models, lest in seeking to be smartly clothed, they become very badly dressed," he says.

He explains that some screen clothes worn by the stars are purposely designed in poor taste, because, in many instances, the character portrayed is an uncouth one.

"Any woman, unless she has a flair for clothes, is likely to parade herself in such an outfit firmly believing she is chicly turned out, because the style had its origin on the screen," Mr. Banton says. "In appealing to women to use discrimination in their purchases, my only interest is this: So long as the screen is to exert an influence over the fashions of the day, it is most important and desirable to have our designs intelligently and correctly interpreted."

"Otherwise, instead of having smart costuming, we will have a veritable flood of costuming with little or no distinction."
