

Wearing of Kimonos by Burton Holmes Began After First Trip to Japan

World Traveler Who Will Lecture at English's Friday Night Also Chooses Oriental Motif in House Decoration.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

WERE going to girdle the globe with Burton Holmes Friday night at the Town Hall series at English's. We're more than eager to go because a glimpse into his manner of living fascinates us.

He took his first trip to Japan with his grandmother. That first impression may account for one of his picturesque habits. In private life in his apartment in New York he wears only Japanese clothes. In fact in all his travels whenever he is indoors, he wears his collection of kimonos.

The New Yorker tells an interesting story about him.

His home is furnished in oriental style. A bronze Chinese urn he has designated for his tomb, for he has asked that his ashes be placed in it.

During a Century of Progress Exposition last year in Chicago, he was official radio lecturer. Spectators wondered why he sat at a particular table in the "Streets of Paris." He loaned it to the Parisian exhibitors. It was the "special" table where he sat at the Cafe de la Paix in Paris. He was a frequent visitor there on his many trips around the world, and finally decided to bring the table home with him.

On his first trip he took notes and pictures. When he returned, he entertained his friends with his boyish observations. He still takes brief notes on his travels, but writes his lectures when he returns home.

He takes a cameraman with him now but before the motion picture he illustrated his lectures with stereoscopic slides. For more than twenty years, he has made lecture tours. He doesn't remember how many times he has crossed the ocean, but he has traveled straight around the world six times.

Mr. Holmes has a Vandyke beard. In his coat of arms he wears the red and white ribbon of the Order of the Crown of Italy. He always carries a stick and gloves. But he never wears the gloves.

He'll take us from Hollywood to Hongkong at his lecture Friday night. We'll pass through Death Valley, the Grand Canyon, Sumatra, Istanbul and Somaliland. We'll pause at London, Paris, Vienna, Budapest, and on through Ceylon, India, Alaska and Japan.

Mrs. Frank A. Butler will return this week from a visit in Florida.

Miss Barbara Haines, student at Connecticut College for Women at New London, and Miss Mary Stewart Haines, student at Skidmore college, Saratoga Springs, will spend their spring vacations with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Morris Haines, 1401 North New Jersey street. Mrs. Haines and Mrs. John M. Carey have returned from Washington, where they visited Mr. and Mrs. E. I. Lewis.

Mrs. Kurt F. Pantzer and Robert Wild will be the stars of "The Worm" being rehearsed under the direction of Dr. John Ray Newcomb for the Players' Club performance March 28 at the Civic theater. Mrs. William Royland Allen is director for "The Valiant" in which Montgomery S. Lewis, Mrs. Raymond Herbert Polz, Everett McCoy and Albert DeLuxe will appear.

Reefer, Ensemble and Cocktail Silk Form Ideal Daytime Trio

BY GERTRUDE BAILEY
Times Special Writer

THIS is a year when one suit doesn't make a spring. Nor will one set of accessories answer the different degrees of formality that ensembles must express if they are to appear suitable to the many occasions that go to fill spring days.

FOR morning walks, our model wears the jaunty double-breasted reefer, photographed center. This one is of brown and beige checked woolen, worn with a high-necked pique blouse. She has been particularly careful in selecting accessories that are in character with the spectator sports theme of her wearable costume. Her shoes are brown kid spectator sport pumps. Her gloves, brim-back sailor and handbag also are brown.

LUNCHEON at smart restaurants calls for a softer type of costume, like the dressmaker suit photographed at the right of the group. Navy blue and white is the fresh contrast recorded here for your approval. Navy blue crepe is used for the hip-length jacket and the skirt with front fullness. White pique fashions the youthful blouse whose collar grows into a smart jabot.

Notice the way the under part of the navy brimmed hat picks up the white pique contrast. Try it. You'll find it flattering, too. The wearer carries an individual handbag inspired by a mail pouch. Her shoes are different, too, from expected pumps, due to the oval cutouts. They are blue kid.

THIS type of suit could certainly go through the afternoon with fashion approval. But there will be times when you will want to change into a costume of even lighter mood, still retaining the street length and the informal aspect.

It might well be the sheer crepe suit with a blouse of filmy net enhanced with a ruffled jabot and short ruffled sleeves. The hat of brown straw shows a predilection for trimming in the bandeau of flowers which emphasize the upturned brim. The shoes are cross strap kid sandals.

Pique for Sports

Sports suits appear in crisp linens and piques brightened by colorful accents. Costumes of beige checked linen, combining slender skirts and loose three-quarter length coats, are worn with short sleeved blouses of multi-colored pique or bright plaid cotton.

Relays Will Pause for Style Show

Butler Queen and Court to Lead Promenade at Athletic Event.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

RELAYS in the Butler relays Saturday night will have some difficult competition. The audience will have to divide its attention between ten lovely co-eds, gowned in attractive evening dress with Glenn Cunningham, holder of a new world's track record, and other outstanding runners.

The grand opening of the second annual relays will be held at 8 Saturday night. The all-day continuous session of track events will be halted at that time, and Miss Janet Jerman, selected queen by the Butler student body will lead officials, coaches and athletes in a promenade about the course.

Boxes have been engaged by persons prominent in the social life of Indianapolis who are interested in sports events.

Mrs. Lindsay

Women spectators will wear sports costumes, in which many of the new swaggar suits, topcoat suits and knitted costumes will be seen. The members of Miss Jerman's court, however, will be gowned in pastel shades in evening dress.

Queen Chooses Lemon Crepe

Queen Janet, herself, will appear in lemon colored crepe. The neckline is high and slashed, falling in triangular revers. The back is cut square and low, with tiny crepe-covered buttons extending from the waistline half-way down the skirt. She will wear silver sandals and rhinestone earrings.

Miss Virginia Foster will wear a fitted white crepe gown, with skirt fullness beginning at the knees. A circular cut apron effect, made of tiny silver beads, is tied at the waist with a sash of crepe. The front of the bodice shows a cowl neckline, while the deep V in back is edged with the silver beads seen in the apron. She will wear silver slippers.

Powder blue taffeta, showing an abundance of accordion pleating, will be worn by Miss Margaret Mattingly. The bodice is light and the skirt fitted, with a narrow belt ornamented with a rhinestone buckle.

Over her shoulders and fastened high about her neck, Miss Mattingly will wear a cape of accordion pleated taffeta. The accordion pleating also will be seen in godets in the skirt. Her sandals will be silver and blue and she will wear rhinestone jewelry.

Tiers Form Skirt

Pastel pink crepe, the skirt made of tiers of dainty ruffles, will be seen in the dress of Miss Marie Collins. The dress is made with a tight-fitting bodice, and a flared skirt. Miss Collins will wear a short cape, edged with ruffles.

Miss Florence Condrey has chosen for her costume a gown of baby blue taffeta and pale pink chiffon, made with a cowl neckline, and shoulders and wings in the back of the pink tulle. The dress will be edged with rhinestones.

White cotton lace, accepted as one of the newest evening modes, will be worn by Miss Avanelle Brennenman. The dress is cut simply, with rhinestone clips at the front and back of the deep V-neckline. With the dress she will wear a short jacket of the same lace, with elbow-length organza pleated into cape sleeves. She will wear white satin sandals and rhinestone earrings.

Miss Grace Barnett's dress will be pearly blue crepe, trimmed in fur. The waist is high, and the neck, while high in front, is slashed to the waist in back. The skirt has a slight train.

Cape Made of Petals

Miss Mozelle Elmes will wear a dress of canary yellow mousseline de soie, with a matching cape formed of petals of the materials.

Smoke blue chiffon will be seen in a fitted dress worn by Miss Florence Rathner, the skirt of which is cut to swirl about the feet. The collar and sleeves of the short jacket of the same material, which she will wear with the dress, will be edged in blue marquisette flowers.

The unusual color combinations which predominate in the new fashions will be seen in the dress worn by Miss Frances Wysong. The gown will be of peach satin, with trimming of blue crepe, which will line a flounce of the peach colored material is lined with green, and the wide sash also shows a lining of the chartruese. Her sandals will be chartruese satin.

Each of the members of Miss Jerman's court will wear silver link bracelets, engraved with the words, "Relay Court." The bracelets are gifts of the Butler student body.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Jane Jordan will help you with the problems that arise in guiding your children. If you have a problem child on your hands, write your letter now.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am 24 years old and the mother of a 3-year-old baby boy. I have in my care a girl 11 years old who is my husband's daughter by a previous marriage. I love my husband and my baby, also my lovely home, by my thorn is this: Before my son was born I loved my step-daughter very much and of course my husband is fond of her. She is a good child, but her mother has tried to twist her right to twist her. After she leaves the child makes remarks that her mother has told her to make in my presence, and her attitude toward me is nasty. As a result, I have grown to dislike his child, and her very presence makes me creepy. I am miserable in my own home. I resent everything I do for her. I know it's wrong and I've actually prayed that I might be strong enough to conceal my feelings, but I'm afraid I can't continue much longer.

It will hurt my husband to give his child back to her mother, as the court awarded him the child on account of his wife's conduct. It will also be a severe blow if I leave and take my baby, as my husband adores his little son and I know that he loves me.

A READER.

Answer—The first thing you must do is to exonerate the child in your own mind. She is not to blame. When a child is nasty you may depend on it that it is the grown-ups who are wrong—not the child.

Imagine now confusing it is to be torn between love for two people who are antagonistic to each other! Imagine how it would be to be used as a missile with which one parent strikes at the other!

The child's mother uses her as a tool through which she gives vent to her resentment against you and the child's father. To get even for the loss of her daughter she would disrupt your home by poisoning the mind of the child.

If you want to be very wise you will not resent the little girl's aggression against you. Let her say all she pleases and get it out of her system. Do not reply to her little outbursts until her resentment has burned itself out. Then you can work with her better because you will have less resistance to contend with. It will not be wise to say things against her mother, or to try to make her take sides.

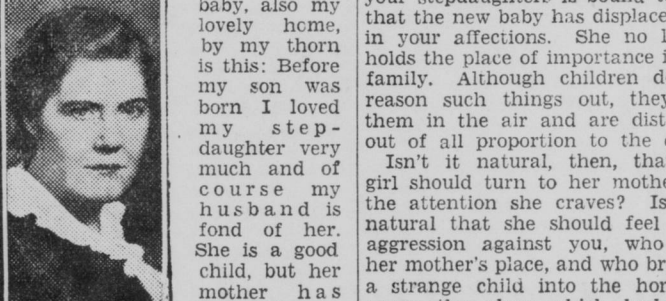

There are a dozen little things you can do to make her feel more secure in your affections. You can show an interest in her school work, in her clothes, her friends, her play. You can include her in your house-keeping tasks, praising her warmly for any co-operation. Pardon her impertinent remarks at the time they are made, but talk to her kindly afterward, pointing out the value of courtesy and the power of your answers to turn away wrath.

If you have any relatives who will welcome the child for a visit now and then, it would be an excellent thing to remove her from the disturbing influences of her home life. After an emotional rest she will respond to your efforts to adjust her to the difficult conditions of her own home.

More than anything else you need to understand your own hidden conflicts which the child sets off by her antagonistic behavior. It isn't the child that you dislike so much as the mother to whom your husband once belonged. You resent what she takes from your own child, but since you know this to be unworthy you must find obvious faults in the child to justify your feeling.

I believe you to be an honest, well-meaning woman who has the patience, the tact and perseverance to save this unfortunate little human being from being shipwrecked by her parent's mistakes.

Dear Jane Jordan—If you can solve the mystery about my wife it will mean a lot to me. I have been married six years. I have a
