

Marionettes to Perform for Orphans

Auxiliary Will Present Harry Fowler Show Friday Night.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

HARRY FOWLER'S marionettes are rehearsing for their performance of "Pinocchio" Saturday afternoon when members of the Indianapolis Orphans Home auxiliary will be hostesses at the American Central Life Insurance Company auditorium.

Miss Burgan

Peter Pianissimo, one of the marionettes, is preparing for special entertainment for the orphans. Making of marionettes was chosen as a project by Mr. Fowler when he was attending John Herron Art school.

He became so fascinated with the work that now he has ambitions of making it more than a hobby. Skeletons of wire for the heads and hands are wrapped with paper and painted for production of some of the marionettes. Others are molded of papier-mache. Mr. Fowler's mother assists in making costumes for the figures.

An amusing feature of the show is the marionette show within the show, according to Miss Constance Fowler, auxiliary president. Last year Mr. Fowler presented "Hansel and Gretel" before guests of the auxiliary.

Music Arranged
Hungarian music, written particularly for the show, will be provided by Mrs. Allen Shimer, violinist, and Alf Liu, pianist.

Children at the orphans home will be entertained by the show Friday night.

Parties to Attend
Mrs. Lowell Patterson will give a party for children of her sister, Mrs. Werner Janssen, who has returned to Indianapolis after spending three years abroad. Alice and Werner Janssen's guests will be Emmy Jean Haerle, John Spaulding and Carol Noel.

Mrs. Robert C. Winslow, Mrs. Frank C. Balke and Mrs. Thomas Harvey Cox will bring groups with their children.

Mrs. Fletcher Hodges Jr. will be in charge of the sale of lolly-pops during intermissions.

VIOLIN PUPIL WILL PRESENT PROGRAM
Miss Lucy Clark, Martinsville, violin pupil of Hugh McGibney at the Arthur Jordan Conservatory of Music, will be presented in a graduation recital at 3:15 Friday night, in the Orpheum. She will be accompanied by Nila Hayes Dutton, pianist.

An advanced certificate in violin will be awarded Miss Clark at annual graduation exercises in June. The recital Friday is part requirement for the certificate.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Are you unhappy married? Put your case before Jane Jordan and read her enlightening answers in this column. The more letters we have, the more interesting the column. Write yours today!

Dear Jane Jordan—I am the mother of two boys in their early teens. Some time ago I feel in love with another man. It was my first offense and I foolishly told my husband everything. My lover's wife also knows about our affair, and when her husband is not home she gets the idea that we are together and calls my husband to talk it over with him. I am not expecting to be trusted any more, but I can't know when he is out so that I can stay home to allay suspicion.

There was a time when my husband was what he calls "just playing around" because I did not show enough affection for him. I never told my boys about that, and always made them believe he was next to perfect. But every time we start quarreling about this thing, my husband threatens to leave me or tries to force me to leave. He then proceeds to tell our boys about it. He says they should know what kind of a woman I am.

I do not believe in worrying my children with our troubles because I feel that they are too young to understand. It makes the children feel terrible and I suppose they think I am an awful mother. In the end we stay together because we both love the children. I don't think this is the right atmosphere for them and I am afraid it is going to have a bad psychological effect on their future lives. I am doing everything I know to keep the peace, but the hatchet never stays buried long. Just what do you think of all this? If the other man's wife did not keep things stirred up all the time, we probably could get settled down to decent living again. Please give me your honest opinion.

MOTHER OF SONS.
Answer—When a woman confesses her indiscretions to her husband I doubt that she does so from the promptings of conscience. She tells him for the purpose of humiliating him. Usually he has been the first to be unfaithful and his wife is inspired more by a spirit of retaliation than by love.

Your wounded vanity needed the love making of the other man, but the real need was to show your husband that you were attractive to other men although he respected him. Beneath all your discomfort at his jealous harangues there has an under-current of satisfaction. You failed to hold his interest by being a faithful wife, but you shocked him into attention by being unfaithful.

If your husband had the good sense to see that he has nobody but himself to think for your digestion, and that your good behavior is dependent upon his, he would cease to suspect you. In other words, he is the cause and you are the effect. The real crime in this case is your husband's use of the children to flog you into obedience. He has no real strength of his own or he would fight his own battles without burdening the young. Children are hard to fool, and the chances are that he was jealous of your respect and perhaps their affection by the continued persecution of their mother. It is obvious that you have their interests at heart more than he has and the boys will feel this instinctively. They are not apt to believe yarns about their mother's wickedness when daily experience proves that it is not true.

What the solution is, I do not know. Your separation should be an enormous relief to your children who quite justly resent being torn between hostile parents. Reconciliation is possible if you are both willing to give up the struggle for supremacy over each other and outline a good working agreement in which you function as trustworthy equals. As it is you are behaving like spiteful children.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am so disgusted I hardly know what to do. I have lived with a man as his wife for about a year. I never did anything like this before, but I couldn't get a position. I keep house for him and he worked in his business night and day.

The worst part of it is that I am pregnant and now he wants to get rid of me. He watches me in the business as if I were dishonest. I never took a penny in my life and I gave him the best of references when I went to work for him. I heard he did some dishonest things in business, but when I have always been honest, why does he treat me that way?

When I was about 20 years old I married a lawyer, but he passed away. I am now 27. I went to church before I came here and lived a decent life. I work until midnight and on Sundays. He beats up on me until my body is black and blue. What on earth can I do?

M. M.
Answer—You can take your case to court and get support for yourself and child. If you had lived with him for two years you could sue him as his common law wife. As it is he is responsible for the baby. See a good lawyer and abide by his advice.

After your child is born, you can begin life over and earn your own way. The man is not worth your while. If he is dishonest himself it is not surprising that he suspects you, for people are prone to project their own faults on to others in this manner.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am a boy of 18 and deeply in love with a girl 14. She is very pretty and sweet. She says she loves me as much as I do her. To give her up would almost kill me. I'm out of school but have no job. If I wait until she is 18 so we can get married, would that be the right thing to do? Is four years too long wait for the girl you love?

A. C.
Answer—Many men have waited longer than four years for the women they love, and since both of you are so young, it is a very wise thing to do. In the meantime you can enjoy a very pleasant love affair.

New Device Being Shown at Block Store Reveals Condition of Complexion

Helena Rubinstein Representative Gives Demonstration of Derma-Lens; Makeup Needs Revealed by Machine.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

A DAINTY dusting of rice powder with a chamois skin once was all that was possible in the way of cosmetics. Now Helena Rubinstein has perfected a device which aids in giving a scientific analysis of skin. With the use of this device, known as the Derma-Lens, the exact texture and condition of the skin may be determined. The machine reveals the oil content of the pores; whether wrinkles are deep-set or superficial, and the condition of facial muscles.

In addition, the Derma-Lens reveals the true flesh tones of the skin. Madame Rubinstein, like many other modern cosmeticians, believes that proper make-up requires the application of powder, rouge and other preparations which will bring out the natural coloring. The machine is being used this week for the first time in Indianapolis at the Wm. H. Block company.

In every skin, according to Madame Rubinstein, are to be found a number of opalescent hues, with different tones predominating. The Derma-Lens is used to determine the dominating hue of each skin, providing a basis for the selection of harmonizing cosmetics. If the skin shows an orange tone, she suggests red geranium rouge and lipstick. Where the skin shows a blue tinge under the Derma-Lens, it should be complemented with cosmetics similarly cast. Red raspberry rouge and lipstick, and blue iridescent eyeshadow are used for this type of skin.

A representative of Madame Rubinstein is available for consultation with the Derma-Lens at Block's this week.

What Mrs. Roosevelt Wears

ON a recent brief shopping tour in New York, Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt selected a number of new costumes for her spring wardrobe. One was a costume of tuckered brown marquisette, made with a three-quarter length coat. The dress to be worn with the ensemble is of the same material, the top enlivened with a white embroidered gaudy yoke, with a large bow of the same material at the neck.

For evening, Mrs. Roosevelt chose an Eleanor blue shadow lace gown to be worn over a matching taffeta foundation. The gown is made with long sleeves, open at the elbows, and has a back decollete treatment with a harness strap effect. The skirt shows a slight train.

Cotton Week to Bring New Fashions
NATIONAL COTTON WEEK, which will be celebrated May 14 to 19, will bring many new fabrics, as well as interesting treatments of old ones, before the public. Organies will be shown in photographic and shaded effects in prints. The designs for these are flowers, taken in different perspective and shown in single or several color combinations. In monotone pattern, organies will have several colors, shaded in delicate blending.

Plain colored organies will be popular in dark shades. Brown is spoken of in advance style news as a preferred color, and navy also will be shown in this sheer, crisp fabric.

Crinkled organies in dark colors will be used for summer frocks. In matelasse, conservative embossed effects of flowers will be featured, as well as tiny checks and stripes.

In the coarser weaves of cotton fabrics, seersuckers, piques and linen-finished fabrics will be prominent. The piques will be in printed and woven designs.

Peter Pan materials, which were among the first of the color-fast fabrics, are shown in a variety of new patterns. The newest of these is "Scatterspot" with a permanent finish dot. It is a sheer fabric, adaptable to informal afternoon and Sunday night frocks for summer.
