

YEAR'S EVENTS RETOLD IN BOOK BY ROOSEVELT

Mapped Bank Moratorium
Two Months Before
Crisis, He Says.

By United Press
NEW YORK, April 12.—President Roosevelt's personal views on the banking crisis of a year ago and subsequent important developments in Washington were revealed today in his book, "On Our Way," published by the John Day Company.

Major state papers and documents of the last twelve months form the basis of the book. Interspersed among them are the President's comment and opinion.

The book brought to light the fact that Mr. Roosevelt had debated the authority to declare a banking holiday for two months before the proclamation was issued. He found, the book related, an emergency law enacted during war-time 1917 which vested him with power to declare the holiday.

Senator Thomas J. Walsh, who until his death was slated for attorney-general in the new cabinet, studied the 1917 law and gave Mr. Roosevelt an opinion that it had not been repealed by a later general act. Commenting on monetary developments, the President revealed he never had definitely decided whether the United States went off the gold standard.

"In one sense we did not," he wrote, "because the legal gold content of the dollar was unchanged. On the other hand, gold here in the United States ceased to be a medium of exchange."

The gold order, President Roosevelt wrote, was the turning point in the economic tide. "It's result was felt almost immediately," he commented. "Every one realized at last that we were serious in our purpose of conserving our own financial resources."

31,000 ARE ATTENDING
EMERGENCY CLASSES

Commission Announces Program
Will Cease May 15.

Reports received from school superintendents over the state by Dr. P. R. Hightower, director of the emergency education program, show that 31,378 adults are receiving free instruction, with 629 teachers employed, according to the Governor's commission on unemployment relief. The announcement said the program will cease May 15.

The tabulation by Dr. Hightower's office was for the last week in February, as March reports are not complete. It showed that 2,145 classes had been formed in the state, an average of more than two classes to each teacher. The enrollments for study courses totaled 49,047, an average of almost one and one-half classes to each student.

Annual Concert Project Is Set for Four Schools.

The Indianapolis symphony orchestra, under the direction of Ferdinand Schaefer, will present concerts for pupils at Washington, Manual, Shortridge and Technical high schools this month and next.

The Richard Lieber memorial fund will provide free tickets for pupils unable to pay the admission fee of 5 cents.

Members of the orchestra will receive no pay for these concerts, which are a part of the organization's annual project. Since more than $1,000 of orchestra funds still are impounded in a local bank, there is doubt that the musicians will receive their full pay for this year.

The last of the orchestra's concert series will be presented some time in May at the Murat.

The bandits in Mrs. Moriarity's car were reported to have held up two women near the Michigan town and robbed them of jewelry and money. Detroit police asked Indianapolis police to check on two suspicious addresses found on a card in the side pocket of the stolen car.

Thomas and Francis Moriarity were kidnaped by the bandits as they sat in their car waiting for their mother, who was in the B. & O. railroad office on Virginia avenue. The abductors drew pistols and forced the boys to drive with them to Martinsville.
