

Rebellion of Youth Succeeds

Passing of Short Skirts Didn't Mean Moral Ideas Changed.

BY GRETTA PALMER
Times Special Writer

NEW YORK, April 21.—One element or another of our population seems always to be hell-bent on shocking the rest. For a while it was the girl who wanted, of all unwomanly things, to go to college. Later it was the young sprig with his hip flask.

Today it seems to be the group who discuss, quite academically, the possibility of changing our constitution to scare Dr. Wirt out of his skin.

But that revolt of youth which stirred up so much excitement and pulpit protest in the '20s seems from all the evidence to be going right on today. Only the parents no longer fight back.

If you imagine, for a moment, that the young set of today has given up the battle and returned to the pre-war standards of morality, give one of them a copy of "This Side of Paradise," in which the scandalous doings of the college boys and girls were first revealed. He will, unless he is a very exceptional young person headed for a theological seminary, wonder what on earth there was in that tepid volume to surprise the older generation.

The young girl of flapper age today does not wear knee-length skirts, but she wears waist-deep evening dresses, bought with her mother's bland approval. The young man does not sneak off in corners to absorb his quota of gin; he takes his cocktails when the family are having theirs and thinks no more about it. He is, without knowing it, the beneficiary of those stormy scenes waged by the generation that preceded him. The fruits of their victory are forms of freedom taken quite for granted by the young bloods of today.

Perhaps the parents of today's adolescents have been cowed. Perhaps. But it is equally possible that they have simply become too much interested in their own concerns to sacrifice the time and lung power expended by the old-fashioned parent in cramming his youngster's style.

Parents Abdicated
Some such possibility is indicated by an article on "Eliminating Parenthood," written by Louise Maunsel Field in the current Scribner's. It is her belief that youth could not—never could have—rebel against its elders if they had not wanted to be revolted against. Middle age, she holds, "has gradually divested itself of those hampering traditions and attributes once imposed by parenthood."

Father became too much engrossed in his business and golf to attend much to the care of his young. Mother, after holding the buck for a while, got ideas of her own and passed them on to the nurse, the governess, the play school and the camp.

Parents, in other words, have not been overthrown; they have cheerfully abdicated their power as a nuisance of which they were well rid.

Youth Now On Its Own
Perhaps the obstreperous battles of the youngsters of ten years ago wore their parents down. Perhaps family discipline would have relaxed, anyway. It hardly matters now.

What does matter is that the thing has been accomplished. A generation with too much mothering and fathering, because of the concentration of parents' interest on two or three children instead of twelve, has been thrown back on its own resources. A generation of parents which was inclined to protect its young from life until after adolescence has found other and more constructive things to do.

A boy in Oriental countries is treated like a man at 14, and Juliet was just about that age when she had her historic affair. Our own adolescents are probably quite able to look after themselves at an age when, in 1918, their families would hardly let them stay out after dark.

A Woman's Viewpoint

BY MRS. WALTER FERGUSON

SOMETIMES it looks as if those of us who write for the papers have far too little common sense for our jobs. I am reminded especially of the many times I have read, and written, that we should simply divorce laws so that all one need do, if one wished freedom, would be to say so, and presto, the thing would be legal.

But let us suppose for the sake of argument that the partner of our woes doesn't happen to want a divorce—frequently the case. That complicates things and ruins our smooth sounding theories.

Divorce should be made honest, but not easy. Far too many people now are miserable because they jumped too hastily from the frying pan of matrimonial worries into the fire of single misery. Many of them have found they didn't really want a divorce to begin with, that they are as unhappy as ever, and that freedom does not always live up to its reputation. It's all very fine to say we should favor the individual who wants release from marriage bonds. But how about the one who would like to stick things out for a while? Is that partner to the contract to be given no rights whatever?

Especially should we deplore the hasty flare-ups which end in definite breaks and which occur over trivial plunders. It seems to me the time has come when we should be intelligent enough to realize that while ideal marriage implies constant fidelity on both sides, ideal marriage is rare, if not unique.

With our delvings into the problems of sex, we ought to know men and women recover from casual loves as children recover from measles and whooping cough and are quite as susceptible to them.

Because a man fancies himself in love with a new blonde today is no sign he will be in love with her tomorrow. And many a good wife is carried off her feet by sudden infatuation, and yet is afterward glad to find herself safely tied to her familiar Darby.

We are not born good, monogamous creatures. Excellent qualities must be cultivated within ourselves, as we cultivate rare roses in our gardens. Character neither is despised nor improved by frequent sprints to the divorce court.

Contract Bridge

Today's Contract Problem

What should South's original bid be? Now that you have counted all the quick tricks that he holds, do you still want to make a two-bid? Suppose South plays the hand at six no trump and West opens the queen of diamonds, can you make the contract?

Solution to Previous Contract Problem

BY W. E. M'KENNEY
Secretary American Bridge League

THIS is another of John Beamish's interesting hands from the Bridge Magazine of England, taken from an article by him entitled "Delaying the Finesse." In today's hand he gives us an example of that interesting squeeze—the Vienna coup—which avoids the finesse.

South has a borderline hand containing two and one-half high card tricks, but as he has only a five card suit, he can not bid originally. North properly bids one diamond and when South makes a one-over-one bid of one spade, we find North being forced to assist the spades with only three to the queen.

To bid one no trump would be signing the hand off, and it is worth while giving his partner a chance. There is no real advantage in having North become the declarer at no trump; therefore, in this case, he must support his partner with only three trump.

South shows that he has a five-card suit by bidding three spades and North takes the contract to four.

WEST cashes his three top hearts and then leads the deuce of clubs. The seven is played from dummy and East plays the ten. The fact that West led a club and East finessed the ten, practically marks East with the queen of clubs. Declarer wins the trick with the king.

Of course, South has no diamond finesse to take, for there is only one play he can make properly. He should lead the ace of spades and then play a small spade, winning in dummy with the queen.

His hope in the hand is to find East not only with the queen of clubs, but also with the queen of diamonds, so the ace and king of diamonds are cashed immediately and then a spade returned, South winning with the king. Declarer then lays down his two good spades, discarding two diamonds from dummy.

That was the reason the ace and the king of diamonds were played first—so that those two diamonds could be discarded. On the first spade, East can let go a club, but on the second spade he is helpless. If he discards the queen of diamonds, the declarer's jack is good, while his only play is to let go the eight of clubs. In the meantime, West has let go a heart and the ten of diamonds, hoping to convince the declarer that he holds two clubs to the queen.

But his original play was too obvious, so the declarer refuses to take the finesse, goes up with the ace of clubs in dummy, dropping East's queen, and the jack of clubs wins the last trick.
