

Dinner and Dance Will Open Season

Country Club Event to Attract Members and Guests.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

INDIANAPOLIS Country Club members and guests will welcome the summer season of social activities tomorrow night at a dinner and dance. Earl Barnes, house chairman, and Herbert C. Piel, entertainment chairman, have been made responsible for success of the party.

Miss Burgan

Mrs. Barnes and Mrs. Piel are adding their share of ideas to increase the entertainment. Assisting with the party will be Messrs. and Mesdames Cornelius O. Allig, Joseph J. Daniels, G. A. Harns, Sylvester Johnson Jr., Norman Keviers, Herman C. Krannert, Irving W. Lemaux, William E. Munk, William H. Wemmer, Jacob S. White, Romney L. Willson, Burrell Wright and Judge and Mrs. Russell J. Ryan.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Chamberlain will have as a week-end guest Miss Helen Morrow, Jackson, Mich., and they will begin the evening with a cocktail party at their home in Miss Morrow's honor. Mr. and Mrs. Piel will be in the party, later to attend the club dinner dance.

Other guests will be Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Piel, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Fleischer, Mrs. Joe Patton and Major Downing.

Contract Bridge

Today's Contract Problem

How would you bid the following hand? South is dealer and both sides are vulnerable.

♠ 9 8 6	♥ 10 6 5 3	♦ J 10 9 8 2	♣ A 7 6 3
♠ K 9 5 4	♥ A 7 4	♦ 9 8 7	♣ 7 6 4
♠ N	♥ S	♦ E	♣ W
♠ A 7 6 3	♥ K J 10 3	♦ A J 2	♣ 5
♠ Q J 10	♥ Q 5 2	♦ K 4	♣ A K Q 3

Solution in next issue. 4

Solution to Previous Contract Problem

BY W. E. M'KENNEY
Secretary American Bridge League

WHEN the bidding indicates that the declarer has an exceptionally strong hand, you should try to make any play that will deceive him, or make it difficult for him to locate the missing cards. There isn't anything difficult about today's hand—you can see that the ten of diamond finesse will stand up. But if East will refrain from winning the heart trick until he is forced to do so, he will at least make the declarer guess on the hand, while if he wins the heart trick early, the declarer can get a perfect reading on the lay of the cards.

South's jump to three no trump told his partner that he had an exceptionally strong hand, and it was a mild slam invitation.

North assisted the slam invitation by showing the new feature in the hand when he bid four diamonds.

If he had bid four hearts, that would have been signing the hand off, asking to play it at hearts. But the diamond bid asks, "Partner, will this help you make the slam?" Of course it does, and South bids the slam.

THE opening lead is the deuce of spades. East plays the ten and declarer wins with the queen. He immediately starts the heart suit by leading the jack.

Now if East would refrain from winning this heart trick until the third round, the declarer would be forced to lead a diamond to get into dummy to make the two long hearts, and would have to guess whether to take the finesse.

He would probably play for a break in the diamond suit, in which case the contract would be defeated. But when East wins this trick with the king on the first round and returns the king of spades, South will go right up with the ace and will now run off four heart tricks, discarding two spades from his own hand. West must make four discards.

Suppose he lets go three clubs and a diamond. Declarer will now lead the ten of clubs from dummy, which South will win with the king, West's jack falling.

Now the declarer can get a perfect count on the West hand by leading the ace of clubs. If West plays another club, it would mean he had only two diamonds. Not having a club, however, West is clearly marked with three diamonds.

The deuce of spades opening showed four spades, as is shown also by his discard of the eight of spades on South's ace of clubs. The declarer discards the nine of spades from dummy and now the diamonds are all good.

West had attempted to hold the diamonds, he would have been forced to discard the jack of spades, in which case the declarer's nine would have been good in dummy, and again it would not be necessary to take a finesse.

Indianapolis Business and Professional Woman's Club re-elected Miss Louise Ford, president, at a meeting last night at the Woman's Department Club.

Miss Irene Dabertny was named first vice-president; Miss Kathryn Petry, second vice-president; Miss Mary Stevens, recording secretary; Miss Lois Baker, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. E. Jane Carter, treasurer.

Board members to serve for three years are Mrs. Bernice A. Dixon, Mrs. Abbie Hall MacDonald, Dr. Elsie G. Stewart, Mrs. Gladys B. Vansant and Miss Fennie Miner, to fill the unexpired term of the late Miss Merica E. Hoagland.

MISS VINCI WED IN CHURCH RITE

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Vinci announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Ceannetta Vinci, and James Cecil, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Cecil.

The ceremony took place at 8 yesterday morning at the Holy Rosary church with the Rev. Marion Priori officiating. Miss Marjorie Meyer was maid of honor and Charles Johnson best man.

After a short wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil will be at home at 1725 South Randolph street.

Mothers of Alpha chapter, Pi Sigma Tau sorority, will attend a tea Sunday afternoon at the Silver Cup. Miss Margaret Arnold is chairman. The sorority will hold a business meeting Monday night at the Fletcher Trust Company parlor.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Air your pet opinions to Jane Jordan and read her comments on them in this column. Write on all problems that interest you and the best letters will be published.

Dear Jane Jordan—There is a tremendous demand for information on "How To Get Married at the Drop of the Hat." The subject is such an easy one to write about that it is difficult for me to resist the temptation to supply the demand.

One of the first things I'd suggest is that you look happy at the sight of a man. You needn't say "How delighted I am to see you," but simply look so happy that he can't fail to get the point.

A man older than yourself is easier picking. He wants a young woman to take care of him when he is feeble. If he chews tobacco you must look happy about that. I lost my first prospect by telling him when he proposed that I disliked a man to chew. He became estranged from me and I was broken-hearted. If you encounter a set-back like that remember there are millions more men in the world and perhaps some of them do not chew tobacco.

Select a victim with plenty of money. If he wants to kiss you, look delighted. If his mustache sticks your nose, look delighted. If he puts his arm around you, put your arm around him. If you're asked to join in the drinking, you must refuse, as if you are drunk you might forget to register your drinks will cost him some money and he will not be so glad to have an expensive wife. Never express annoyance over his drinking nor tell any friend about it who will make disparaging remarks about the prospect.

If there is any question as to your virtue, you must see that he understands you are virtuous. Of his virtue you must never question, and if you find he is not virtuous your cue is to look delighted.

If the prospect swears, you must never mention the fact to him or any one else. You needn't swear yourself unless you feel like it, and then you must never swear at the prospect or anything he likes. If the prospect is interested in anything, you must be even more interested in it than he is, even if it happens to be another woman. Never see anything but virtue in her. Never talk of her in a disparaging way but always see her beauty of face, mind and body.

If the prospect smokes, look happy and run and find him a match. Never inquire how much he spends for tobacco. Never ask the men to do anything disagreeable. Ask him to eat a piece of cake, or have a drink of water, come sit by the fire, or swing in the shade, and if a disagreeable situation comes up, take the blame yourself. Show him you always keep the house clean, but never know he brings in mud. In general any man will fall for the above instructions. It is well to dance, play cards, swim, golf, ride horse back and drive a car. SQUAWK.

Answer—Your instruction would be remarkably effective on a type of male that is fast becoming a bad number. On the whole I believe men are hungrier for companionship than you give them credit for, and that they demand more brains in their women than formerly.

I suppose every man has a secret ideal of an uncritical and adoring woman who will accept him as he is without demanding inconvenient changes in his habits. He still has a preference for the leading role in love and prefers the woman willing to give it to him. But I believe he demands more than a nit-wit smile from a typical "yes" woman.

What your letter reveals is a deep-seated envy of men, and what you conceive to be their advantage in life. You are not satisfied with the feminine role which you secretly believe to be inferior. Your method of establishing your own prestige is to poke fun at the masculine sex. When you belittle men you feel pleasantly superior by contrast. Behind your tirade is a feeling of deep discouragement with your own ability to attract and hold a worth-while man. Instead of tackling the job in a direct, courageous manner by making yourself sufficiently interesting, you take the negative method of ridiculing the unobtainable, thereby gaining for yourself a sort of spurious superiority.

I admit that some of your points are funny, and well-taken when applied to the great average male, but after all your observations are superficial and confined to one group. They do more to reveal the fact that you have set a goal which you have no hope of reaching, than they do to instruct young women in winning a man with whom they can enjoy an intense reciprocal companionship. In other words, failing to get attention by pleasant methods, you proceed to squawk for it.

Hosiery of Bygone Era Presented by McCallum in Block Store Display

Harsh Weaves Offer Sharp Contrast to Filmy Modern Stockings; Clocks Once in High Favor.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

SILK stockings worn many years ago are shown in a display by the McCallum Hosiery Company in a window at the Wm. H. Block Company store this week. They date hosiery from the days when it was considered not quite respectable to wear such finery, and when dust ruffles discreetly lifted, as the wearer stepped into her carriage, revealed fine lisle hose on the conservative weaver.

"Legs were confidential in those days, and after seeing these stockings I can understand why," one woman has commented.

They are not the sheer, filmy stockings of today, but harsher weaves, many of them black. Black lace was considered the most elaborate kind of hose during the first days of silk stockings.

The most unusual pair, and probably the most attractive in the display at Block's, is black half way up, and white the rest of the way. Clocks were used extensively in the decorations of these hose, some of them showing clocks of Moorish embroidery and others decorated with Chinese embroidery. One pair has clocks made of feathers.

Another design idea of these days was that of using an elaborate embroidery pattern up the front of the stocking. Colors were bizarre and brilliant. One pair in the McCallum display is a paisley pattern. Another is a grassy yellow, which makes one wonder just what kind of a costume could have been worn with them.

The McCallum factory is one of the oldest in the hosiery business. In comparison to this display of the first made silk stockings, McCallum's new hosiery shows the sheers and knit, in colors suitable for wear with new spring and summer colors.

Suggests Style Shows at Races

A WELL known millinery manufacturer, in a letter to a racing commission, has requested that race tracks be improved, to make them a background for style shows during races. He has called attention to the practice in Europe of women frequenting the tracks to see the displays of couturiers, with mannequins wearing the newest costumes.

Although there was no formal presentation of mannequins at the Kentucky Derby last week, many women from all parts of the country were seen at the race, which were suggested by those seen at Louisville. Although showers were feared, the weather was agreeable, and spectators dressed for the occasion.

Checks and plaids were seen in dresses, coats, hats, gloves and bags. Many costumes had striped or polka-dotted trimming.

One-Piece Dresses Seldom Seen

VERY few one-piece dresses were seen. Almost every costume showed a jacket or coat of some kind. There was no taboo on any kind of fabric. Taffeta, seersucker, silk crepe, stiffened net, light weight woolsens, tweeds and sheers were seen, in addition to peasant linens and crash.

Peggy Bradley, daughter of E. R. Bradley, appeared in a plaid homespun suit with matching hat, and wide leather belt. Mrs. A. G. Vanderbilt wore a plain navy crepe dress, with navy basket weave collarless coat.

Blue Worn With Yellow Accessories

THOUGH she probably forgot all about her costume in the excitement of seeing her horse, Calvacade, win, spectators admired Mrs. Isabelle Dodge Sloane in a navy ensemble. Her dress was a jacket model of navy crepe, and she wore with it a desperate type hat in the same shade.

Colors were abundant. Contrast in costumes was accented. One navy costume was complimented by all yellow accessories, even to yellow sandals. A white jacket dress was worn with red accessories, and a beige knit costume with bright blue.

The effect of racing on current fashions is seen also in a new fabric, which recently has been introduced for active sports dresses. It is jockey crepe, and is said to be the same material which is used for the bright colored suits which jockeys wear.
