BABY ORANG-UTAN SUCUMB; VICTIM OF MOTHER'S LOVE

CHICAGO, May 11.—Betty Orang-Utan was dead today, victim of a too ardent love on the part of her own mother.

The two-pound infant, fourth orang-utan born in the United States, died of malnutrition. Attendants at the Lincoln Park zoo said that nervous concern of Nancy, the baby's mother, caused a failure of milk.

Artificial feeding was impossible because of the zealous manner in which the 100-pound parent guarded her offspring against intruders. Keepers feared the baby would be killed if they attempted to take it from the cage.

Floyd Young, zoo director, said that Nancy had attempted to feed Betty yesterday by carrying milk in her mouth from a pan provided for her own use.

"The baby seemed to take the milk," said Young, "but it probably was the wrong kind or insufficient in quantity. After the baby died Nancy laid her down, then picked her up and rocked her almost as a human mother would. It took us almost two hours to entice her to an end of the cage so we might get the body."
