LUMBER CODE IS DESIGNED TO CUT FIRE LOSS

Industry Anxious to Prevent
Pepetition of Costly
Oregon Burn.

By Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance
WASHINGTON, June 1.—One of the reasons why lumbermen are joining the new NRE code rules for forest conservation is the hope that there will never again be such a national disaster as the "Tillamook burn" of last August.

Since the days when half this country was covered by forests—only 25 per cent is now—there have been many terrible blazes among the trees. One in Wisconsin in 1871 destroyed more than 1,000,000 acres and 1,500 lives, another in Minnesota killed 418 and denuded 100,000 acres in 1897, and the great Idaho fire of 1910 swept over 2,000,000 acres and killed eleven billion feet of lumber. The annual estimated loss is seventy lives and $25,000,000 worth of timber.

Tillamook burn, however, swept out eleven billion feet last summer over 300,000 of Oregon's acres, embracing some of the richest virgin stands of Douglas fir, cedar and hemlock on the continent. The timber destroyed was equal to the annual production of lumber. The fire started August 14, presumably from the friction of a steel logging cable being dragged across another, at the end of a long dry spell. Both the state law of Oregon and the new code rules of forest practice—the latter effective June 1—enable the authorities to halt all logging operations when the dry woods become vulnerable to combustion.

The fire began in freshly cut timber and was discovered almost immediately by the logging crew, but the day was windy and the blaze spread rapidly, racing through evergreen "islands" and debris from logging. Under the code such debris hereafter must be cleared out by the logging operator.

On the second day the fire leaped into the tops of old-growth Douglas fir, and spread until two separate fires covering more than 5,000 acres were raging. Then rain and fog helped the fighters, and the fire was confined for four or five days as the winds died down. The fire-fighting crew was increased to 900. But then came a break in the weather, with strong east winds. Quickly the fire raced along mountainous ridges. The fires spread twenty or thirty miles in each direction through virgin timber until it embraced more than 500 square miles, covering most of Tillamook county.

Dr. V. H. Moon to Attend Conference in Germany.
Dr. V. H. Moon, for several years head of the pathology department at the Indiana university school of medicine here, will sail tomorrow for Europe with his wife to attend the triennial conference of the International Association of Pathologists, of which he is the American director.

Former I. U. Medical Man to Visit Europe
The physician, who now heads the pathology department at Jefferson medical college, Philadelphia, will remain in Europe all summer. The association's convention is to be held in Germany. Mrs. Moon will remain in Paris for musical studies when her husband returns next fall.

Dr. Moon's mother and sister, Mrs. Lida A. Moon and Mrs. J. M. Stearns, are residents of Indianapolis.

RUSSIA MAY BUY MORE U. S. COTTON IN 1934
Reports Predict Probable Short Crop in Central Asia.
By United Press
MOSCOW, June 1.—Prospects of increased cotton sales by the United States to Russia this year were seen today in reports of a probable short crop from Tashkent, capital of Russia's great central Asian cotton realm.

Central Asia produces fully 80 per cent of all Soviet cotton. Last year the government obtained from the United States RFCA credit of $4,000,000, most of which was used to buy American cotton.
