BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

WE walked in on Bob Brown at the Robert H. Brown stables as he eyed Dresden Lady critically. "Fine, fine!" he muttered to himself pensively. "And Star Dust, you're looking good, too," he replied to her soft nicker. On down the line he went and with praise for

Contract Bridge

Solution to Previous Contract Problem

BY W. E. MCKENNEY
Secretary American Bridge League

THERE is something fascinating about a coup play. For those interested in coups, here is an unusually interesting one, as the declarer must literally get rid of three of his trump to trap East's jack of hearts. The hand was played by M. J. Glick of Cleveland.

The bidding is unusually interesting. Of course, South's one heart bid over one diamond is a force. North then confirms his diamond bid by bidding three diamonds, which is also a force. South correctly bids only three hearts.

North's bid of three spades is a constructive bid, showing another feature of the hand, hoping to get into a slam. Now, when South goes to four hearts and North goes to four no trump, South is correct in jumping to six hearts.

WEST's opening lead was the ten of clubs, which East won with the jack. East returned the king of clubs, which Mr. Glick, in the South, trumped with the deuce of hearts. South next played a small heart. West showed out and trick was won in dummy with the ace.

Of course, the declarer had to find a way to get down to three trump, the same as East, with the lead in the dummy. Therefore, he returned the queen of clubs. East played the ace, and the declarer trumped with the five of hearts.

A diamond was played and won with the ace, and the king of diamonds returned from dummy, on which Glick discarded a spade. A small diamond was the next play and it was ruffed with the six of hearts.

A spade was led and won in dummy with the ace. Another diamond was returned. East did not trump, but discarded a spade. Glick trumped with the seven of hearts and then led the eight of spades, winning in dummy with the king.

Mr. Glick was down to the king, queen, and ten of hearts, while East was down to the jack, nine, and eight of hearts. Any card could be led from dummy and East had to ruff with the eight of hearts.

Mr. Glick overtrumped with the ten, and won the last two tricks with his king and queen of hearts, making his contract of six odd doubled by employing a triple squeeze.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Your opinions for and against the ideas you read in this column always are welcome. Write whenever the spirit moves you!

Dear Jane Jordan—Evidently you believe that you are all-wise enough to solve the problems that arise in the lives of those misguided people who write to you. From the photo of yourself in your column, I do not doubt that you are a human being. Granted that you are, I can not understand what leads you to believe that you are in a position to give others advice, inasmuch as you no doubt have troubles of your own which you are unable to solve.

Did you ever realize the trouble and heartaches you cause others by the advice you disseminate? I do not believe that any human being has the spiritual right to give advice to those in trouble as you do. The corrective power is in the Christian spirit, if any, of each of those in trouble, and should be worked out by them alone. It follows that if we were all true Christians there would be no trouble.

It seems to me that people in positions similar to yours are trying to be small gods on earth without authority from the true God, each and every one doing more harm than good.

GALANT 'UOMO.

Answer—Some of your points are well taken. I think we have cause to question the motive of any one who gives advice. Playing God is the favorite stunt of the chronic adviser. Wherever the advice is colored by the emotional attitudes of the adviser, or when it comes from a closed and hide-bound mind, it is pernicious.

It also is dangerous for a person to give advice who has not solved his own conflicts insofar as it is possible. No human being is free from personal difficulties. The intricate nature of his methods in dealing with his own situations determines the value of his opinions to another.

It is true that each individual has to work out his own destiny for himself. The sooner he learns to do without props, the better. The only good he can hope to receive by asking advice is the help which comes from the statement of the case, and the fresh light which an experienced person can throw on his problem.

Dear Jane Jordan—The two letters harshly criticizing your advice that I read in your column moved me to such resentment that I can not resist writing you. In my opinion your column is the sanest of any that has ever come to my notice. About the good woman who prays for the soul of lost humanity, I wonder what her prayers consist of. If she beseeches the Deity to have mercy on them or to awaken them to better ideals it would seem to me that she is giving Him instruction and turning over to Him a job which she is unwilling to undertake herself.

I hope you won't be disturbed by these letters of infantile thinking people. Every time I read one of them I can understand how it is that a youngster's path is difficult these days, and if I ever spoke personally to the Deity, I should thank Him for you.

C. M.

Answer—Thank you cordially for your letter. Isn't it interesting how the same ideas can stir up such opposite reactions?

Dear Jane Jordan—Wonder why folks like to hurt and find fault with each other? I'm afraid the reader who intends to pray for you will have to rid her heart and take the beam out of her own eye before her prayers will even be heard, let alone answered. Keep up the good work. We enjoy it!

MRS. G. RICKETTS.

Answer—Intolerance is one way of protecting ourselves from the tendency to deviate too far from accepted standards. It serves to fortify us against our own doubting tendencies. The clever person does not waste time in empty criticism; he is too busy doing constructive, creative things.

I do not object to criticism, but I think it is valuable only when divorced from animosity. Some people can not enter into an academic discussion. Their own prejudices muddy the stream.

William Bloom Presents Sports Attire at Ayres; Exclusive Fabric Used

'Magnolia Mesh' Is Material Employed by Noted Designer Now in Hollywood to Assist Film Stars.

BY MRS. HELEN LINDSAY

NEW sports dresses, manufactured by William Bloom, whose name means more to the buyers of women's sports clothes than possibly any other, have just been introduced. They are made of a new fabric, called "Magnolia Mesh," exclusive with Mr. Bloom. Taking its name from the exotic blossoms of the far south, the fabric shows the same petal dull finish as the flowers. It is a heavy, pure silk mesh material and is offered in chalk white.

The fabric has been made into a variety of sports dresses. They are shown at the sports shop of L. S. Ayres & Co. in tailored dresses with sleeves, sun tan frocks for tennis, and shirt and short combinations. The shirts and shorts are lined and shadow proof.

To relieve the white, the dresses have ribbed belts of latex, in Neapolitan stripes, with matching collars and cuffs.

William Bloom is in Hollywood at present, consulting with designers for film stars on sports clothes. He took this trip following the visit of a delegation from the film colony, seeking improvements in the sports clothes designed for the stars.

Before leaving for Hollywood, he suited his handsome New York apartment to Joe Nathan, former well-known Indianapolis business man.

Miriam Hopkins Best Dressed

AN interesting comment on the effect of Hollywood on styles was made recently by Marcel Rochas, one of the leading designers of women's clothing, following a short visit to Hollywood on what he termed a style pilgrimage.

"The American film is without doubt the greatest style influence ever known," M. Rochas said, after viewing studios of Hollywood stylists. "We designers in Paris find it necessary to attend the movies regularly in order to keep up with the style trend of the motion picture in which the United States certainly excels."

M. Rochas was accompanied on the tour by his wife. He considered Miriam Hopkins the best dressed woman in Hollywood.

Stationery for Children Offered

MOTHERS who are sending their children to camp or on vacation trips, and want to encourage them to write letters home, will be interested in the new boxes of children's stationery shown at Charles Mayer's.

They are individual-looking boxes, the covers, showing cleverly designed animals. The designs are cut out of heavy cardboard and colored in pastel shades.

Pigs, horses, Scotties, and kittens are included in the box-cover designs. Within are twelve sheets of note paper, bearing in one corner a reproduction of the box-cover design. The envelopes are plain white.

Slip Covers Presented at Wasson's

WITH cottons more important for summer wear than they have been in any previous year, the detachable slip-cover bags shown at Wasson's are particularly appropriate. The bags are in pique and other cotton fabrics. The covers may be removed and laundered, and it is possible to match costumes with individual slip-covers for the bags.

Finer Linens for Late Summer Wear

THIS summer has presented a variety of linen fashions, with costumes of linen designed for practically any hour of the day. The choice of weaves is comparatively narrow. The linens which are shown for late summer are finer and smoother than those introduced early in the season.
