

'Stay Home' Vacationing Made Lively

Tennis Play Centered Social Attention on Woodstock Club.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN Times Woman's Page Editor

SOCIETY agrees on one point of procedure in the summer months. "If we don't go away to loll in lake sands, we'll make our stay-at-home days as diverting as possible," we all acclaim in one breath.

After Miss Isabelle Parry played in the Woodstock Club tennis tournament, she decided it was time to be off for a vacation with her mother, Mrs. D. M. Parry, at Mansour E. Oakes' summer cottage at Torch Lake, Mich. Miss Parry and her mother will be at the resort during July.

Young daughters felt very grown-up Thursday, lunching with their mothers, when Mrs. Sylvester Johnson Jr. entertained before she played her tennis match with Mrs. Kurt Pantzer.

Mrs. Garvin Brown attended with her daughter Nina, who played in the tournament and won her way to the finals. Virginia Brown was there with her mother, Mrs. Austin Brown, and Anne Elder with her mother, Mrs. Bowman Elder. Mrs. Johnson's daughter Mary had as her guest Martha Lois Adams, daughter of Mrs. Robert A. Adams.

Mrs. Pantzer was hostess at another table for a luncheon party. Among the spectators of the tennis matches were Mrs. Theodore Stein Jr. and her daughter, who have been living for several years in California.

Mrs. Stein is remembered as one of the founders of the Indianapolis Junior League—a worthy heritage she must think when she reviews the accomplishments of the league. Mrs. Charles Schaf was one of the friends with her at the club. Mrs. Stein plans to remain in the city most of the summer.

Members of the Radcliffe College Club gathered today for luncheon at the Meridian Hill Country Club. Mrs. Austin V. Clifford presided.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

A letter to Jane Jordan is one method of looking before you leap. Let her help you view your problem from all angles before you act.

Dear Jane Jordan—My girl friend and I are very much in love. We have been going together for almost a year. I want very much to marry her, but my finances will not permit me to take care of her. Then, too, she has to finish her college education.

We have talked the matter over several times but we do not know just what to do. She is 19 and I am 23. I have a great deal of attraction for each other which we find hard to resist.

This yearning is making us very restless, and I am very nervous as a result. I have very high ideals in regard to love which I try to live up to. I think that when two people are sure of their love for each other it is all right to be intimate if circumstances are such that they can't marry. Am I right in my beliefs?

PUZZLED.

Answer—Shakespeare says, "There is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so." Love without benefit of clergy is not evil in itself, but it might as well be as long as the majority of people think so.

The consequences of what you propose will be just as tough as if you actually had indulged in a criminal act. No one can escape the judgment of the people who live around him. Even when it remains unspoken, the silent condemnation is just as keenly felt. Your environment (a small Indiana town) is not one which feels any tolerance for a departure from the popular mores.

Of course, you plan to keep your friends in the dark, but you may be sure that they have a decided nose for unearthing love which begs to remain hidden, and never wait to verify the facts before reaching a conclusion.

Now the point I am coming to is this: Can you stand isolation from your group? Can you bear to have your girl placed under hateful suspicion? Do you care for the good opinion of the world

Program of W. C. T. U. Unchanged

Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, National President States Policy.

By Times Special

EVANSTON, Ill., July 2.—Before Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, national president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, left for the world convention at Stockholm, Sweden, she discredited rumors that the union had shifted its program.

"The union rather has broadened and intensified its program of education and constructive action on the alcohol problem," she said.

"Widespread reports that the National W. C. T. U. has changed its historic plan of attack upon the beverage liquor and all allied social and industrial evils, has no basis whatever in fact," continued Mrs. Smith. "The mistake, perhaps, grew out of the nation-wide interest in and commendation of the program of alcohol education as developed by Miss Bertha Rachel Palmer, director of the National W. C. T. U.'s department of scientific temperance instruction, which in the past six months has won the attention and support of thousands of educators and leaders in social work."

"But scientific temperance education as to the effects of alcohol is but one of thirty distinct battle fronts on which the White Ribbon movement continues to wage relentless war upon the liquor evil."

"These thirty battle fronts include every relation of the alcohol question to modern life, such as child welfare, Christian citizenship, health, medical temperance, non-alcoholic fruit products, social morality, temperance and missions, legislation, motion pictures, international relations for peace, religious education, work among youth, research and literature. As has been the case during the last six decades, constructive activity on each phase of the many-sided issue is being directed by able leaders."

"The demoralization of the people, either individually or collectively by the liquor habit or the liquor traffic will be challenged by the W. C. T. U. through every Christian and patriotic means available till the awful grip of liquor has been broken by the spread of truth and by the education of public opinion leading to the enactment of protective legislation."

"As evidence that the movement is winning a rapidly widening acceptance among thoughtful women the nation over, we are glad to announce that all recent new membership records have been broken, with thousands of accessions recorded from practically every state in the union during the last ninety days."

Cotton for Bridal Gowns

Nothing is more youthful than cotton. Realizing this, many smart brides choose it for their wedding gowns. And they'll dress their attendants in it, too.

The bridal gown, above, an Elizabeth Hawes model, is fashioned from crisp organdy. It has an extremely high neckline, long sleeves and is worn with a short organdy veil. The bridesmaid also is wearing organdy in red, white and green candy stripes with a small hat of matching material.

Contract Bridge

Today's Contract Problem

West is playing the contract at four spades. North has bid diamonds. South has bid diamonds. South opens the four of diamonds, South winning with the ace. He then plays the ace and king of hearts. How should West play the hand from here?

Solution to Previous Contract Problem

BY W. E. MCKENNEY Secretary American Bridge League

To open with one no trump on a weak hand at contract gives you partner no information. He may not wish to bid, yet he is forced to reply with two of something. If he does not hold much and can not depend on you for much, and if he does step out for a two bid, the opponents will murder him for about 1,400 points.

Therefore, the better contract players of today have adopted Sims' ideas of original no trump bidding—making them only with hands rich in tenace positions, with no singletons or weak doubletons—hands that contain at least three and one-half primary tricks and that may gain a trick on the opening lead.

North's bid of two clubs can be made on weakness or strength. However, it is forcing, after an original bid of one no trump, and does guarantee a five-card suit.

After South's bid of two no trump, if North bid three clubs, it would be a sign-off.

THE four of hearts is opened by West. East goes in with the king and the declarer wins with the ace.

There is no use trying to start the spade suit, because only three

Ayres Presents Gowns in 'Butcher Boy' Design Created by Mainbocher

Rosamond Pinchot, Actress, Pictured by Fashion Magazine in Silk Pajamas With New Silhouette.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

THE Russian peasant, the Chinese coolie, and the French sailor have influenced women's fashions during the past season. Schiaparelli has resorted to the costumes of Spanish bull fighters for ideas for hats, and to the paintings by Goya for dresses that billow out in bell-shapes at the bottom.

Now Mainbocher, responsible for some of the distinctive silhouettes and fashion trends that have held favor in other seasons, presents a new silhouette, which he admits is copied from the French porter, or butcher boy.

Rosamond Pinchot, niece of Pennsylvania's Governor, Gifford Pinchot, appears in the new silhouette, carried out in a pair of silk pajamas, in the July Harper's Bazar. Miss Pinchot is interesting in her own right, in addition to being a member of the prominent eastern family, because of her stage successes. She appeared as the nun in Max Reinhardt's production of "The Miracle." She recently has signed a contract to appear in motion pictures.

The pajamas which Miss Pinchot wears, carrying out the Mainbocher silhouette, are of polka-dotted silk. The trousers are full and worn over them is a smock with small tattered collar at the high neck, and long full sleeves, caught in at the wrist with hands which button with the same fastening as that used up the front of the smock.

Two Models Shown in New Alpaca

THE silhouette has made its appearance in Indianapolis in two evening gowns at the L. S. Ayres store, both in the new alpaca which promises to be the outstanding fabric for fall. One is of black alpaca, cut like the pajamas featured by Miss Pinchot. The dress is loose from the shoulders, with a yoke in back, and fastens with three large crystal buttons high at the neck.

The other is a wine-colored alpaca, the back straight, and fastens with three large red buttons in front. It is belted with a narrow string belt of the same fabric as that used in the gown.

The butcher boy's silhouette will appear probably in various types of women's clothes during the fall season.

Bananas Provide New Drinks

If you are asked to "come, drink a banana," don't think that the excessive heat has affected your host's mind. It's the latest idea in nourishing, cooling drinks. Bananas have been enjoyed as a fruit for many years. Lately they have entered the vegetable class of foods, and appear on menus in surprising forms.

For the banana drink, there already are several variations. In a milk shake, the banana is sliced in small pieces into a wire-mesh strainer, through which it is forced with a spoon. Then it is combined with cold milk and one-fourth teaspoon of vanilla, and mixed in a cocktail shaker. Just before serving it is sprinkled with nutmeg.

Other drinks, including eggnogs, chocolate malted and other milk drinks, are being made different by the addition of strained banana pulp. The drinks have appeared at drug store soda fountains throughout the country, where they promise to become special favorites.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore white satin designed with a train and high neckline and carried bride's roses and baby breath. Her tulle veil fell from a coronet of orange blossoms.
