MARKET BOARD CHIEF WISE TO WALL ST. WAYS

Joe Kennedy Should Be, He Made Millions There Himself.

By Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance

WASHINGTON, July 12.—President Roosevelt wanted a couple of Wall Street eyes on Wall Street. That, partly, is the reason he selected six-foot, freckled, red-haired Joseph P. Kennedy to head the securities and exchange commission, now organizing for its complicated task of supervising the issuance of securities and regulating the stock markets.

For "Joe" Kennedy, as the President has called him for years, knows the ins and outs of the market. The jargon is his language. Fluently he talks of "fly guys," the traders who jump into the market Monday and get out Thursday with enough quick money to take a vacation, as he expresses it.

That sort of business is out henceforth, says Mr. Kennedy, who is still sensitive about the revelation that he got a cut out of one of the "repeal" stock pools of 1933. A history of the alcohol pool operation was laid before Mr. Roosevelt as an argument against the appointment of Mr. Kennedy, but without success.

Ties of friendship bind these two men who met when Mr. Roosevelt was assistant navy secretary and Joe Kennedy was in charge of ship-building for Bethlehem Steel, boss as a youngster of $5,000 men. The greater their paths separated, Franklin Roosevelt ran, unsuccessfully, for vice-president, was plunged for a time into political oblivion by disease, then came back as Governor of New York. Mr. Kennedy went from steel into the brokerage business, then blossomed forth as a moving picture magnate.

Irish to the Core

A year before Governor Roosevelt became a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination their acquaintance was renewed in the executive mansion at Albany. Irish heart and Irish soul, Joe Kennedy threw himself into the campaign to elect his friend President. And he opened his pocket-book.

He sat with the board of strategy at the Chicago convention. He was a familiar figure on the Roosevelt campaign train. James A. Farley relied on him.

There were vague reports that Mr. Kennedy would get this or that government post, even a cabinet portfolio. But he dropped from the picture. He did not even attend the inauguration. It was assumed that he preferred private life.

Financial Prodigy

Then, this summer, came the opportunity to give Mr. Kennedy a job that he knew something about. Mr. Farley was insistent that the President appoint him. He got the job despite the protests of those who did not see why a Wall Street man should sit on a commission to regulate Wall Street.

Joe Kennedy was a financial prodigy. After graduation from Harvard, where he played first base on the Crimson nine, he became a state bank examiner. His father and a group of friends organized a bank, the Columbia Trust Company, and at 25 he became its president. When the war came along he went with Bethlehem Steel at its Fore river plant in Massachusetts.

Mered Film Companies

Subsequently, he transferred his activities to Hayden-Stone, becoming its Boston manager. There he learned the investment and brokerage business under the late Galen Stone, whom he numbers among the great in American finance. Expanding his operations he ventured into the motion picture field and was, at one time, operator of three competing corporations. It was he who merged Pathe, First National and Films Booking Offices into what is now R. K. O.—Radio-Keith-Orpheum. For a period he was chairman of B. F. Keith & Co.

He has made lots of money and lots of friends. For his charming wife, four sons and five daughters—the children range from 2½ to 19—he has homes in New York and at Cape Cod. He spends his winters in Florida—at least he has. His new job probably will introduce him to Washington winters.
