

Party Rides Bicycles to Noblesville

Distance of Thirty-five Miles Covered Included Return Trip.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

WE have marveled at the bicycle addicts who have rented mounts for two-hour periods and have cycled to the last minute. We haven't wondered that they returned slightly florid of face and lagging in speed.

But quite the most ambitious bicycling party we have heard of is the trek to Forest park, Noblesville, arranged by Mr. and Mrs. William D. Crooks. Mr. Crooks' pleasure in bicycling never has diminished since the early days when long trips were the fashion.

Miss Burgan

riding their own wheels, met their friends in Broad Ripple. Jack Bumgardner arrived on his own wheel, but Miss Margaret Welch, Carolyn Atkinson, Helen Johnston, Betty McCurry, Marie Osterman and Milton Fitzgerald rented theirs at Herbert Behrent's shop.

They took off at 8, the women fetters free in shorts. They started out in a rush of speed, and then slowed down to a pace of ten or eleven miles an hour. Benjamin F. Caldwell and his nephew, Bennie Caldwell, followed the party in a car, carrying supplies and a lunch, to be served at the park.

After a six miles' ride, the party paused for a rest. They started on for another lap and stopped again about five miles out of Noblesville, where Mr. Caldwell met the party with a jug of lemonade. At 10:15 the cyclists arrived at the park, where they sought comfort in the swimming pool.

They lunched and at 12:45 headed back toward Indianapolis. In the morning the skies had been clouded. On the return trip the sun had evaded the clouds and "burned maliciously" the riders decided as they pedaled against a rising wind.

Mrs. Crooks and Mr. Bumgardner had the advantage of frequent training and they pushed on toward home and deserted the remainder of the party. They arrived in Indianapolis at 2:15. The other cyclists took time out for two rest periods and finished the trip at 3:15.

Mileage for the round trip was thirty-five miles. Mr. Crooks is planning several other trips, and means to build up his friends' stamina to cope with the increased mileage of a trip to Brown county this fall. He's wondering if he can convince his friends that they would enjoy such a long distance journey.

The popularity of house parties at lakes continues, and the numerous groups of young vacationists leave together for their favorite resort. On Sunday Mrs. Richard Hennessy left for Lake Wawasee with several friends of her daughter, Miss Jane Hennessy. Misses Alice Marie Wooling, Barbara Jean Holt, Rose Ann Doeber, Luana Lee, Kathleen Rigsbee and Betty Wyson will swim and enjoy all the other recreation offered at the lake this week.

English Conception of Formal Attire

TYPICAL of the Englishwoman's taste in formal attire are the three gowns shown here. Below, left, is Geene Glenn's Ascot and garden party gown of pastel striped organza, embroidered with a white angora spot and worn over a square-necked underbodice of white, hand-tucked organza. The waistline is trimmed with two white, angora wool flowers and so is the enormous hat with irregular brim.

"London Calling," is the name of the flattering evening gown, right, by Peter Russell. It's made of printed, wave-striped rosin with an amusing belt at the natural waistline and a short train. Necklace, earrings and bracelet match the belt buckle of spun glass. The House of Reville, court dressmakers for the queen, presents the original model, upper left. Made of beige silk with bronze dots, its elbow-length sleeves are trimmed with blue fox. The bronze hat is fashioned from very fine straw.

A Woman's Viewpoint

BY MRS. WALTER FERGUSON

EVERY thoughtful person in the United States must be alarmed by the news that we now have one divorce for every eight marriages. Especially when we realize, as we surely must, that divorce is nothing more than a bad habit. It has become fashionable, and our desire to be in the mode has run away with our good sense.

It can not be denied, I think, that a very large percentage of our divorces have their inception, not in actual marital wrongs, but in imaginary or superficial woes. Mental cruelty is a term made to cover a multitude of trivialities, while incompatibility is but another definition for childishness and bad temper.

To be exact, most of our matrimonial troubles never happen. Yet, because divorce has become the vogue, we have lost our belief in the essential worth of permanent marriage. Here lies the source of all our grief. You can not very well be true to something in which you do not believe.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

Give your problems an anonymous airing in this column and receive the benefit of an impersonal opinion! Everybody is invited to write!

Dear Jane Jordan—I read your articles every night and I'm asking you for advice. I know your answer already, though. I am 19 years of age and I go with a fellow 23. We've been going together over two years. I do love him devotedly and he loves me with all his heart. For some reason unknown to me he can't marry me. I have even lived with him because I can't give him up. He is insanely jealous of me if I even speak of another fellow.

Jane Jordan

I can't give him up. He is insanely jealous of me if I even speak of another fellow. He beats me. We've had lots of fights. But keep going back to him. I've quit him and gone with other fellows but my heart yearns for him. Tell me what to do. I'm sure he loves me. Every one says that, yet what is wrong? He isn't bad looking and neither am I. I have a wonderful job. Is there any hope for either of us? I can't stay away and neither can he.

SKEETER.

Answer—Evidently both of you like your misery. If you didn't you wouldn't go back to it time and time again. People who have no liking for fights keep out of them whenever it is possible, and in this case it is perfectly possible.

Many a couple fights for the pleasure of making up. Their perverse emotions will not rise to a peak without the unnatural stimulus of combat. Thus a man whips himself into a frenzy of jealousy in order to enjoy the rise of its accompanying physical excitement, and its gratifying ebb in the partner's surrender.

It is not love which draws you and your lover together so much as the fact that each of you satisfies a secret need of the other's nature which other partners leave untouched.

Each man and each woman has a right to expect that his partner's emotions be aroused by natural means. But if this was your real wish you would have checked the man out long ago. Think it over.

Dear Jane Jordan—I would like to say a few words to Tired Husband. I am a wife who was deceived by her husband, just as Tired Husband deceived his wife. I fought hard the same thing your wife has fought. Hurt pride is the most nerve wracking thing. I have had three operations and my doctor said I was healthy, all but my nerves. Lost confidence is one thing that can't be built up again. Just like a convict, you can't go back and be trusted again by the one you stole from. Your wife is only human. I went to pieces several times. Some people brood over things worse than others, my doctor told me.

I love my husband, but our home never has seemed the same. I plead with him to do right and asked him if he had lost all respect for his family and his dear mother who taught him right. We live in a small place where other people know that my husband has been unfaithful. My children and I often hear little remarks.

I would advise Tired Husband to move from the location where he was unfaithful to his wife and promise her all over again just like when he married her. Then begin life all over, just like I have asked my husband to move. Today is gone and tomorrow a new sun rises.

MRS. L. K. P.
Answer—I believe that your letter strikes a universal note because of the typical of the average feminine attitude. I am not out of sympathy with the woman whose illusions have been shattered by her husband's behavior, but I can't help noticing that it is not the deed itself which hurts her so much as the fact that other people know what happened. This is a very human trait, but it should give the wife considerable pause.

Would moving to a new environment change relations between herself and her husband for the better? Would it fulfill the need that led the husband away in the first place? Or would it merely remove the audience which witnessed her humiliation? I believe that there is a sounder and saner method of meeting the problem than that of flight from its most painful elements.

Mayonnaise Variations Offered by Best Foods for Summer Salad Use

Recipes Developed to Provide Dressings for Fruits and Combination Dishes Made of Vegetables.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

MAYONNAISE, which remains the favorite dressing for salads, after many years of use, had its origin in the celebration of the ousting of the British from Mahon, on the tiny island of Minorca, in 1791. The Duke de Richelieu gave a banquet to celebrate the victory. The duke's chef presented him with a new sauce, which so delighted the guests that the chef was called in to explain how it was made.

When the chef was asked to name the new sauce, he called it "Sauce Mahonnaise," which later became simply "mayonnaise." Mayonnaise has been changed during the many years since that time, to suit use with fruit salads, and unusual combinations of vegetables. A few of these have been developed by the Best Foods home economics department, and suggested for use with summer salads.

Cucumber mayonnaise is ideal for use with hearts of lettuce and other greens. The recipe for it calls for one-half cup double-whipped mayonnaise, one-half cup sour cream, and one-half cup of finely diced cucumber. Mayonnaise is to be folded into the slightly whipped cream, and the cucumber added and blended. Equal parts of chopped pimiento and diced cucumber may be used instead of cucumber.

Also for use with hearts of lettuce and other greens is fresh tomato mayonnaise. This recipe calls for one cup of mayonnaise; one-fourth cup of chopped pimiento; one-half teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, and one cup of skinned fresh tomatoes. Add Worcestershire sauce, pimiento, and shredded tomatoes to mayonnaise.

For fruit salads, lemon cream mayonnaise has been developed. To make it, use one-third cup of mayonnaise, a dash of salt; two and one-half tablespoons of confectioners' sugar; one and one-half tablespoons lemon juice, and one-third cup of whipped cream. Mayonnaise, sugar, salt and lemon juice are folded into the whipped cream and blended thoroughly.

Raspberry Favors Two Dressings

FRUIT salads also are used with fresh raspberry cream mayonnaise. For it, use one-fourth cup red raspberries, which have been crushed slightly; one tablespoon lemon juice, and one-fourth cup whipped cream. To the mayonnaise add raspberries, sugar and lemon juice, and fold into whipped cream.

Fresh fruit salads are delicious when served with frozen raspberry cream mayonnaise. This recipe requires one-half cup of whipped cream. Mayonnaise and raspberries are folded into whipped cream, and blended thoroughly. It is then frozen about two hours in an electric refrigerator. It should be served at too low a temperature.

For tart fruits and vegetable salads, a sour cream mayonnaise is successful. One-half cup of mayonnaise and one-half cup of sour cream, which has been whipped slightly, are folded together.

Washington Cookies Made at Fair

FIFTEEN thousand cookies, "just like the ones George Washington's mother baked him" 200 years ago, are baked each day at a Century of Progress fair, in Chicago, by Ethel Moss, Negro "mammy" at Wakefield, reproduction of Washington's birthplace. The cookies are made from Dromedary Gingerbread Mix, and are for sale at Colonial Village at the fair, by special permission of the Washington-Lewis chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, Fredericksburg, Va.

"Mammy" Ross, who is from Virginia, too, says that the baking of the cookies isn't difficult at all. "Just add water to a package of the gingerbread mix, drop them in the pan, and bake them a few minutes," she advises.

Contract Bridge

constructive move, you should then jump to game.

If West were to open a small heart, the contract could be defeated. However, the natural opening on this hand is the jack of diamonds, which East will win with the king.

Now let us stop to consider the hand from East's standpoint. His great fear is that he will be forced eventually to lead into that club tenace of dummy's.

Therefore, his first move should be to get the ace of diamonds out of his hand. His next move is to knock out dummy's ace.

THEREFORE, East should now should be played?

If he plays a small heart, the declarer will win with the ace, pick up the trump, ruff a diamond, and throw him back into the lead by playing the jack of hearts, forcing him to lead into the club tenace.

Now if the declarer has the king of hearts, he is not going to lose any heart tricks, so you should try to prevent an end play on your part and return the queen of hearts—not a small one.

This will give you the chance of making a club and a heart, and with two diamonds you already have in, it will defeat the contract.

Of course, double dummy, the declarer could still make his contract by taking two rounds of trump, ruffing a diamond, returning to his hand with the ace of clubs, and then leading a small heart.

West will be forced to win with the king and now he has nothing but hearts or diamonds, the declarer will ruff in dummy with the queen of trump and discard his losing club.
