

Collector Gets Photo of Madonna

Freer Martin Acquires Camera Study by Brandt Steele.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

WHEN Freer Martin added Brandt Steele's bromide, "The Madonna," to his world collection of photographs, a current of excitement ran through the Indianapolis Camera Club. Mr. Martin's interest in the photograph stamped it as a rare example of pictorial art, for the collector's collection is composed of prints made by many famous photographers.

Mrs. Helen Woodward posed for "The Madonna" in the chapel of All Souls Unitarian church. With his accurately focused camera and watchful attention to lighting effects, Mr. Steele developed a picture of soft shadows, appropriate for a madonna subject. The artistry of the posing and lighting reminds one that Mr. Steele's father, Theodore C. Steele, was one of Indiana's best known artists.

Mr. Martin's collection in Washington is the second largest collection of photographic prints in the country. During about forty years of traveling, he has accumulated nearly 400 prints. Mrs. Cameron, the first pictorialist, is represented along with Stieglitz, Steiglitz, Sophia Lauffer and Mission of Belgium. Several years ago Mr. Steele met Mr. Martin in San Francisco and they exchanged views on photography.

The Camera Club, of which Mr. Steele is a veteran member, is arranging an exhibit of twenty prints, which will be shown in the galleries of several other amateur clubs in the country. The local clubrooms at 110 East North street usually have one of these inter-change exhibits on view.

Wins High Recognition

Mr. Steele, professionally an architect, has been working with his camera since 1886, and during that period has exhibited his pictures in Japan, Europe and America. He has won a place in the "Who's Who in Photography." Recently he was the only photographer in this section of the country invited to exhibit at an important show in Tokyo.

The portrait has another interest. Mrs. Woodward is wearing the madonna costume that won her first place at last year's Indiana Artists Club ball. Costumes for the ball were to represent subjects from old master paintings.

Copied from Old Canvas

For three months Mrs. Woodward worked to reproduce the costume in the painting of Bellini's "Madonna," which hangs in the British Museum. Her design in the Byzantine period robe and headpiece was judged at the ball as the most authentic reproduction.

The headpiece, which is an important detail in the portrait, was designed, gold leafed and jeweled by Mrs. Woodward, who arranged a halo of gold and jewels as background for the crown. The scarf beneath the crown was designed by the batik process and in the photograph falls softly over the head.

The black velvet shawl has a white design on the border, and the rose and white dress has a batik border at the neckline.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

The first step in solving that problem of yours is to get it out in the open where it can be studied and discussed intelligently. Write your letter now!

Dear Jane Jordan—I am married to a man whom I love very much although I didn't love him when I married him. He asked me two years ago to marry him because he didn't want to be laughed at. Pay, his fiancée, eloped on the eve of their wedding. I married him because I needed money which I didn't dare ask my family for. For a year everything was all right. Then he began to slight me. My friends noticed it, and my twin sister who knew why I married him, asked me why I stood for it; why I didn't leave and get a divorce. I didn't tell her that I loved him, but put her off instead.

Jerry and I are suited to each other. We have the same tastes except in a few things. He isn't in love. At least I don't think so. I know he doesn't love Pay. I wish you would give me your advice as to whether I should stay and make a bid for his love, or leave and get a divorce? A SLIGHTED WIFE.

Answer—There are few things more astonishing than the infatuation for which people will marry. A business man who will spend hours with his legal counsel before signing a business contract will enter into a marriage for the vainest of reasons. A woman who brings the best possible esthetic and practical consideration to the choice of her wardrobe, will accept a proposal of marriage without a vestige of mature consideration.

When you and your husband married, each of you were childishly attempting to evade a condition with which you were unwilling to cope. All you succeeded in doing was to acquire a new set of problems. Your only hope of success lies in facing reality without resorting to the empty technique of evasion.

All went well for a year, you say. You fell in love, but your husband learned to slight you. No doubt the dawn of love brought with it a flood of romantic idealism which built up a new attitude toward your husband. You came to expect more from him than he bargained to give you. You became more sensitive to the lapses of attention which may occur in the best of marriages.

Now that you are in the thick of the situation, it is more courageous for you to try to make a go of your marriage than it is to cast your eyes toward the divorce exit. Nothing is to be gained by resenting conduct which you had every reason to expect. Everything is to be gained by making yourself indispensable to your husband as an interesting companion and a co-operative partner. I can not tell you how to do this for I do not know his needs or the resources of your personality. The method is up to you.

Dear Jane Jordan—I wrote you last week in regard to marrying a young man of 23. I agree with you that I am too old for him, but how can you help loving a young man whom you live for, work for, and have your mind set on getting? I'll admit I have taken most of the time that he could have spent with younger girls, but what have they offered him?

You don't know how blue and nervous I feel as I sit here writing. I don't know which way to turn. I have never spoken of marriage to him, but I am sure he loves me. I want to do the right thing for both of us. I can not see any man to even compare with him, but I don't want to deprive him of his liberty. He has worked hard since he was a child and he is not afraid of work. My nerves have reached the breaking point. TWENTY-THREE AND THIRTY-THREE.

Answer—You are not faced with an immediate decision because the young man has not proposed. If you see it coming, you are right to give the matter some thought. I would like to be able to tell you that an unequal marriage has a good chance of success, but it would not be true. If you marry him against your better judgment, you should be prepared for the fact that you may have to go on alone at a much later age when adjustments are harder to make. This is not inevitable, of course, but highly probable.

The thing that a younger girl, without your financial means, has to offer is a more vigorous challenge to a relationship in which the young man assumes an equal share of responsibility. Your first letter proposed to send him to school, thereby making him the dependent partner of the union.

City Bathing Beauties to Vie for Automobile and World's Fair Trip

'Miss Indianapolis Beach Queen' Entrant in Dunes Water Carnival to Be Chosen at Broad Ripple.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

INDIANAPOLIS will have a contestant in the Dunes water carnival to be held in Michigan City Aug. 10 and 11, for the selection of the most striking beach queen. The contestant will be selected at the Broad Ripple park swimming pool, from the thousands of feminine swimmers there. "Miss Indianapolis Beach Queen" will be sent to the northern Indiana carnival next month.

The contest here is open to all Indianapolis women and girls. Letters giving the name and address of entrants are to be sent to Ralph M. Bennett, manager of Broad Ripple park. They should reach him before midnight, Aug. 3.

Notices will be sent to all entrants of the definite date of the local contest, which is expected to be held Sunday afternoon, Aug. 5.

Local judges will be selected to pass upon entrants, who will appear in bathing suits in the contest. Entrants will be judged on beauty, figure and personality.

The Indianapolis winner will have her expenses paid to Michigan City. Winner at the Dunes carnival will be given a free visit to A Century of Progress fair and a 1934 Chevrolet automobile.

The contest is one of the recent activities at the park. This week the annual free swimming course sponsored by The Times and Broad Ripple pool is being held, with classes each day grouped according to age.

The course, which is under the direction of Arno Wade, head lifeguard of the pool, will close Saturday, when certificates will be awarded to those passing swimming tests.

Special picnic days have been planned for Saturdays at the park, by the management. The Indianapolis Street Railway company and the Shell Petroleum Corporation will sponsor outings for boys and girls of the city, and employees will attend on special days.

Remodeled Claman Cafeteria Opened

YESTERDAY Edward Claman opened officially his remodeled cafeteria, 14 South Capitol avenue. Mr. Claman, well-known as a restaurateur in Indianapolis for many years, has re-arranged his cafeteria to include table service and counter service.

A modernistic bar, designed by him and placed near the front of the room, has proved so attractive that its design will be included in the catalogue of the firm manufacturing it.

A new steam table, next to the bar, holds hot foods. Attractive chair stools are placed along the counter. Tables are grouped around the rest of the restaurant.

Schiaparelli Offers New Perfume

A NEW perfume by Schiaparelli has been introduced by Daggett & Ramsdell, and is expected to make its appearance soon at Indianapolis stores. It is called "Salut de Schiaparelli," and comes in a package which news dispatches describe as characteristic of the designer. The package looks like a brick of cork, but really is a patented box, insulating the perfume bottle, which is flat and flared, with a huge block "S" on the glass stopper.

The perfume itself is said to be reminiscent of an old fashion garden, in which there is an abundance of freesia.

A Woman's Viewpoint

BY MRS. WALTER FERGUSON

I WAS relieved to read in Serenade, one of the Tower magazines which has a tremendous vogue among the girls, that we have started talking horse sense to them.

Dr. Louis E. Birsch, discussing some of the reasons why women do not marry, spoke to the point when he said, "Men despise what they acquire too easily. They are fighting creatures, and enjoy overcoming obstacles."

In short, the male prefers a mate who is a little hard to catch. We may grant there is a new etiquette in the love game, and that old methods always are not adequate, but the truth still holds that the young lady who falls too eagerly into open arms is making a mistake if her objective is matrimony.

In my opinion our young women suffer from an overdose of sex knowledge. When the director of the School of Practical Arts at Teachers college, New York, pleads for high school courses in sex, I think he regards the question from a purely academic point of view.

Young people nowadays are queering their chances for a happy life because they think entirely too much of sex and too little of the other qualities which compose the well-rounded individual. It's very good perhaps to give them primary instruction in sex matters, but the trouble is that they are all after a master's degree.

The balance of life is upset for the modern girl because she has been misled by a belief that sex appeal is the only necessary qualification for a wife. Hence she has neglected her disposition, is away behind on her household arts, and by substituting all more subtle charms to that which begins with a capital S, she often finds herself a wholly disillusioned person after marriage.

If we want our high school girls taught more of the arts of allure, how about having them brush up on "Clarissa Harlowe"? There was an old-fashioned girl who knew all the tricks. She beckoned and ran away. No male lives who will not rise to that bait.
