The show will be the first Mr. Rice has missed since Jo Ann began to appear in horse shows; he is on a fishing trip in Canada.

What 'Dude Ranch' Guests Wear

Clothes from Macy's, New York.

BY MARIAN YOUNG
NEA-Service Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK—Dude ranch fashions are smart enough to make any girl want to pack up and go west on a holiday.

If you've never before had an urge to ride a horse or to find out whether cowboys really sing "The Last Roundup" you'll want to when you see the sleeks with slide fastenings, the twill jodhpurs and the ten-gallon hats.

The other ensemble, right, includes cavalry jodhpurs of rust-colored twill, a plaid skirt with high collar and mannish cuffs, red silk kerchief, beige leather fly whip, jodhpur boots, braided cowhide belt and a big hat that's becoming to any pretty head. Don't go without at least two evening dresses.

Regardless of how much "roughing it" one's supposed to do on a ranch, you may be sure that there'll be some evening parties. Don't take dark sheer and chiffon town frocks.

Spectator sports dresses, including several sweaters and a woolen skirt, will be more useful and twice as appropriate. Be sure to take, in addition to riding boots, some flat-heeled shoes.

Of course, whether or not you know a thing about horses, you'll need at least one riding habit. They're flattering and help you to get right into the dude ranch spirit.

Any girl would be flattered by the outfit sketched here at the left. It consists of dark green slacks with slide fastenings on the sides, gray and white cotton shirt and tie and a yellow gabardine vest that's trimly fitted through the waistline.

Manners and Morals

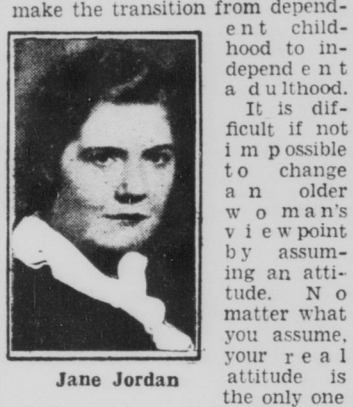

BY JANE JORDAN

What are the secret motives back of your behavior? If you do not understand your own conduct, write to Jane Jordan for an explanation.

Dear Jane Jordan—On the average of every two months I think I am in love. I'm perfectly aware of the fact that the affair will blow over, but mother refuses to acknowledge this and insists on arguing about my latest, and forbidding me to see him. How can I act so that she will treat the current boy friend civilly and not drive me to distraction with her complaints?

JOAN W.

Answer—Maybe you use your boy friends as a sort of weapon against your mother. Perhaps they symbolize independence to you. The more boy friends you have, the less you feel the tie to your mother. Young people do many strange things when they make the transition from dependence to independence.

Jane Jordan

It is difficult if not impossible to change an older woman's viewpoint by assuming an attitude. No matter what you assume, your real attitude is the only one which registers.

Your letter tells me absolutely nothing about your mother except that she is fearful and objects to your boy friends. Why? If she is young and attractive herself, she may unconsciously regard you as a rival. In that case you might feel the urge to outdo her in the art of attracting men. If she is old and unattractive, she may be secretly envious of your affairs. Whichever way it is, my guess is that you merely are straining against parental restraint, and feel that you should have freedom of action without supervision from your mother.

Dear Jane Jordan—I had gone with a fellow over a year when we had a little misunderstanding. I thought we had been seeing too much of each other and suggested that we would have one more date and then not see each other for a time. On this date he was drunk and mistreated me. Later he told me he was sorry and that he still loved me.

I have been running around with a fellow who is nice looking and shows me a good time, but I can't like him as I do the first one. Should I give the first fellow another chance, or should I forget him if I can.

UNDETERMINED.

Answer—I don't know enough about the boy to advise you intelligently. I am inclined to mistrust a young man who gets drunk when he is disappointed, and who becomes a roughneck when he is in his cups. Personally, I would regard it as a character defect which barred him from all serious consideration. To enjoy each other is sober and behaving himself is one thing. But a permanent partnership with him in which you can not walk out when he behaves in such a sorry manner is too risky for any self-respecting girl.

Dear Jane Jordan—I read a letter signed "A Thousand Year's Old" in your column, and would like your readers to hear my story. Like this man I went out and deceived my wife. I was 43 years old and looking for a thrill. I was not only disappointed, but lost all I had. My wife has married again and is very happy. A better wife and mother never lived. My daughters are not the same with me.

I am alone most of the time. The one I left my home for is wrecking other homes. My advice to men who have a good home is to be faithful. I wish I could live my life over. I still love my wife, and God only knows how I suffer when I see her. We lived together twenty years and have been parted four.

LONELY AT 47.

Answer—You've made a major mistake, and unlike most people you are willing to admit it. That does not mean that your life is ruined. Your experience has taught you much. There is no use in useless repining. It is quite possible for you to find other friends, and another partner if you desire. All is not lost by a long shot. Start over.

Dear Jane Jordan—Several weeks ago I told you I could draw, and you advised me to take it up. Should I go in bed $180 for an art course when I owe other debts? An art school agent who saw a drawing I had made said I had artistic ability. Of course salesmen have a line, but he said if you never get backbone enough to go ahead and do a thing, you never get it done. He mentioned one girl who after taking the course for seven months began making money.

I am 25. My husband is 31. We haven't any children. He is satisfied at whatever I want to do. So what is your opinion of the whole thing.

MISS TWENTY-FIVE.
Answer—Take some of your drawings to the Herron Art Institute and ask some one there to verify the salesman's opinion. You can be sure of getting reliable information about your potentialities, and about the school which is offering the course.

Country Club Fashions Feature Second Show of Styles at World's Fair

Chicago Women Sponsor Exhibit Disclosing Simplicity of Line and Dressmaker Details as Distinctive Points.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

PATRONS of A Century of Progress fair last week saw an unusual style show, the second of a series of four planned for the summer, and staged in the Good Housekeeping Gardens. The show was presented as "A Day at the Country Club," and was directed by a group of Chicago women, with Mrs. John R. Winterbotham Jr. broadcasting simplicity of line and individuality through dressmaker details and unusual color combinations characterized the clothing shown, which ranged from spectator sports and luncheon types to costumes for active sports. Modeling the clothes were young Chicago society women. They appeared in printed and plain crepes, silk jersey, boucle knits, sheer woolsens and linen for spectator sports wear and luncheon frocks.

White was accented by bright color in a number of the costumes shown by the group. A dress of this kind was of white silk jersey, topped by a full length hand-crocheted coat. White and navy combinations were prominent. One was a white crepe dress with navy lacings, and another was a navy silk jersey middie blouse worn with a white linen skirt.

Small all-over patterns were seen in printed silks, as well as spaced colorful designs on white grounds. A one-piece frock in this group was mulberry colored, with tiny white designs. It was made with slightly draped sleeves, which fitted into cuffs just above the elbows, and the square neckline was caught into a point at each side with semi-circular crystal clips. Active sports clothes included a white jockey cloth tennis dress, with a covered back, and a white linen dress with a short blue linen coat on raglan lines.

Shorts were shown more for archery than tennis. A white and brown boucle shirt and shorts was featured, in addition to blue and white striped jersey shorts and coats.

Costumes were shown for bathing and bicycling. Active sports wear was modeled by women golf, tennis and swimming champions.

Ayres Store Re-Arranged for Escalators

IN preparation for the installation of escalators, which are expected to be in operation in the L. S. Ayres store by Dec. 1, a rearrangement of the store is being made.

Luggage, which formerly was shown on the first floor, has been moved to the eighth floor. All mechanical household equipment will be grouped on the seventh floor. The layaway department has been moved from its location near the other offices on the seventh floor to a position in the rear of the houseware department.

The bakery department will be moved from the seventh floor to the first floor, adjacent to the epicure show in the southwest corner of the store.

The beauty parlor, on the eighth floor, will be remodeled, to occupy twice as much space as it formerly used.

Contract Bridge

Today's Contract Problem

Here's Number 13 of the 18 playing problems by Henry P. Jaeger. Double dummy. This should not be difficult. The contract is three no trump by West. North opens the jack of hearts. Par on the hand is for West to make his contract.

Solution to Previous Contract Problem

BY W. E. MCKENNEY
Secretary American Bridge League

THE twelfth of this series of eighteen playing problems by Henry P. Jaeger employs a simple squeeze play.

It would appear that North, the declarer, should have no trouble in making his contract of six odd. However, it is unfortunate that the spade suit will not break, as West has control.

East has control of the hearts and diamonds, while, between East and West, they have control of the club suit.

But the declarer, during the play of the hand, can get a good count on the East hand, and still make his contract.

I do not like original no trump bids with a singleton. However, North has 150 aces, nine cold tricks, and you can hardly blame him for wanting to tell his partner about all those high card tricks.

A forcing two bid will perhaps answer the purpose better and assure a slam contract. With the original bid of three no trump, it is just fortunate that South kept the bidding open. North's jump to six no trump might be termed optimistic.

AGAINST a six no-trump contract, East opens the four of diamonds. A club is discarded from dummy and North, the declarer, wins the trick with the queen. He now takes two rounds of hearts. When West drops the jack, it warns him that the heart suit will not break.

The ace and king of spades are cashed, and on the second spade, East shows out, discarding a diamond. Declarer then cashes the ace and king of diamonds, and two clubs. He tries to drop the king of clubs by leading the ace, but this play does not work. So now the six of spades is led. East has to let go a diamond.

The trick is won with dummy's jack. The queen of spades is returned, declarer discarding the deuce of diamonds.

East is squeezed—if he lets go the king of clubs, dummy's queen is good. If he lets go a heart, North will win both heart tricks. And if he lets go the jack of diamonds, declarer's six of diamonds will be good. In any case, the small slam contract will be made.

BACHELORS' CLUB TO MEET TONIGHT

Second informal gathering of the Bachelors' Club since the opening ball is scheduled tonight at the Indianapolis Country Club, when members will discuss plans for a party.

The party is occasioned by the engagement announcement of one of the club members, Thomas K. Mahaffey Jr., and Miss Jane Watson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Watson.
