

MULTIPLE BIRTH IS RARE AMONG HUMAN BEINGS

Only 35 Cases of Quintuplets Are Known to Men of Science.

This is the first of a series of six articles concerning multiple births.

Science Service

Man usually comes into this world as he leaves it—alone. That is why the Dionne quintuplets create such interest. Double births are common enough so that you probably have among your own acquaintance at least one pair of twins, but births of numbers larger than two are extremely rare. Not more than about thirty-five authenticated cases of the birth of quintuplets, like the Dionne set of five, ever have been recorded in medical history.

Not over a half dozen cases of the birth of six infants at one time are known to science. Such multiple births have been reported much oftener, and newspaper dispatches from foreign parts recently have told of cases of six, seven, eight and even ten infants born on a single occasion. Such reports, however, usually are from great distances, and are without verification. Scientists suspect either a garbling or exaggeration in the transmission of the tale, or a more or less deliberate hoax.

For those who have studied human anatomy believe that if more than six children were crowded together within a single mother, they must of necessity be so small that they could not possibly survive unless it should be with the most modern methods of care for premature and under-developed infants.

Nevertheless, in the old town of Hamelin, famed for its Pied Piper and the children who flocked after him, a tablet on the front of a house commemorates the birth of seven children at one time at 3 o'clock in the morning on Jan. 9, 1600.

The tablet's inscription may have been a slight and pardonable exaggeration on the part of some early booster committee or Chamber of Commerce, or it may in fact be a fable like that of the Piper himself or like the story of Lady Margaret Countess of Holland who is reputed to have given birth in 1313 to no less than 365 children at one and the same time.

The survival, even of quadruplets, is extremely rare. So far as is known, the lovely Keys girls, now distinguished students in Baylor university, Texas, are the only quadruplets who have grown to adulthood in this country.

The Dionne quintuplets are the only ones positively known to have had even one of their number live as long as ten weeks.

BULL SENDS SWORD FLYING; ONLOOKER DIES

Spectator at Spanish Event Killed in Unique Accident.

By United Press
CORUNA, Spain, Aug. 7.—Candido Roig Roura, a spectator, was killed at the bull fights today when a bull, stricken with a sword, tossed himself viciously and sent the sword flying through the air.

It penetrated Roig's breast as he sat in the fifth row of the grandstand, and he died en route to the hospital.
