A. A. Milne

"Peace With Honor," by A. A. Milne, which will be published soon by E. P. Dutton & Co., is scheduled to cause a commotion not only in England but in this country. Curtis Brown, literary agent, after reading the first nine chapters wrote the author, "It stings like a gad-fly. Bless you for saying what no one else, so far as I know, has said."

BY WALTER D. HICKMAN
MANY years ago De Quincey startled the thinking and reading world by writing a book about dope and drugs. Today, Cecil De Lenoir's "The Hundredth Man—Confessions of a Drug Addict," is being discussed all over the country, not only by those who are fighting the traffic but by those who read for pleasure.

The title was obtained from the contention of the author that "of a hundred men or women who attempt to cure themselves of the drug habit ninety-nine fail."

The man confessing in "The Hundredth Man" failed three times in seeking a cure. The fourth attempt worked.

Anybody with a grain of intelligence who reads this book will never be lured into using any drug which puts the user into "a living hell."

Claude Kendall, the publisher, announces that this is an autobiography and that Mr. De Lenoir "dares to confess all."

The author writes: "For fourteen years I wandered and had my being between two contents as one of the 'unburied dead.'"

"The Hundredth Man" is illuminating at the very beginning, because the writer confesses how he learned the dreadful meaning of dope.

At times, this autobiography reads like fiction, but there is abundant evidence that the writer is speaking the truth.

The writer admits that he joined a party of men and women clad in pajamas in London and he went on his first "sleigh-ride."

From then on, the author gives a recital of the horror and degradation he went through to get dope in nearly every possible form.

Extremely interesting on the exposure of the methods of selling dope in London, New York, Paris and many other cities.

"The Hundredth Man" is adult reading. The facts are terrible and beyond description, but the lesson is there on every one of the 228 pages.

It sells for $3.

KANSAS POLICE KILL BANK RAID SUSPECTS

Three Dead; Highway Cop Unhurt in Bloody Clash.

By United Press

EMPORIA, Kan., Aug. 10.—The Kansas highway patrol, responsible recently for the capture of Jim Clark, notorious bank robber, today had another feather in its hat with the slaying late yesterday of three men suspected of planning a raid upon the State bank of Lebo, Kan.

None of the two carloads of patrolmen who participated in a brief but bloody roadside battle near Neosho Rapids was injured. No identification of the dead men had been made early today.

U. S. BOARD IS CAUTIOUS ON STOCK POLICY

Care Exercised to Avoid Any Disturbance on Wall Street.

By Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance
WASHINGTON, Aug. 10.—The national securities exchange commission has adopted a careful and cautious policy in regulation of stock exchanges in order to avoid any disturbance of the market and to achieve a long-time effectiveness of government supervision.

This was the explanation today by officials of the decision to waive until June 1 next year, the strict listing requirements imposed upon corporations by the stock market act in favor of a temporary and less rigid method of registration.

The commission, in tempering its regulations, is acting within the law which gives it the option of deferring strict requirements specified by the act until June 1, 1935, if it deems this "necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors."

Conditions Are Guide

This means that the commission will not require from corporations for the present the detailed reports and information which the law sets forth as a requisite for listing of their stocks upon exchanges.

Officials explain that they are guided by definite conditions. Imposition of rigid restrictions at this time, they fear, would cause many corporations to withdraw their securities from exchanges. While Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy said no threats have been received, he regards this fear as well grounded, as do other members of the commission. The whole commission favored a careful course.

The major objective at this stage is to bring all listed corporations under the blanket of federal regulation, it was explained, so that supervision will be complete and effective. Refusal of corporations to list their stocks at the outset would militate against the underlying purpose of the act and of the commission, they feel. As far as possible, the commission desires co-operation, though determined not to sacrifice its regulatory functions in any important particular.

War Scare Hits Stocks

It is feared, too, at this time by a nervous market that reacts quickly as was demonstrated a few days ago when stocks plunged on erroneous European war scare rumors.

The law requires comprehensive data, including quarterly reports in considerable detail, organization and financial structure of the business; the terms, position, rights and privileges of the different classes of securities outstanding; the terms on which securities have been offered to the public; salaries to other than directors and officers over $20,000; bonus and profit-sharing arrangements; management and service contracts; options and the like.

Mr. Kennedy expects to make public Tuesday the new rules and regulations governing stock exchanges and the temporary registration requirements. They have been discussed in the last few days with representatives of the New York and Curb exchange as well as other exchanges who have found them, according to the chairman, "very fair and reasonable."

OCEAN FLIERS PLAN HOP NEXT SUMMER

Nonstop Distance Record
Goal of Pair.

By United Press

HATFIELD, England, Aug. 10.—James Ayling and Leonard Reid, who completed a flight from Ontario to England yesterday, said today they would try again next summer in the same machine for the world non-stop distance record.

The fliers were attempting a non-stop trip of approximately six thousand five hundred miles to Baghdad but had to come down in England because their fuel supply was running too low.

Descendant of Pocahontas Dead
