

CHILDREN TO HAVE DENTAL SERVICE FREE

$5,000 Appropriated in Civil City Budget to Aid School Pupils.

Free dental service will be provided Indianapolis school children through the $5,000 appropriation for twelve dental clinics in the 1935 civil city budget. Dr. Herman G. Morgan, city health officer, announced today.

The service was discontinued in 1933 following budget slashes. Between 10,000 and 12,000 children received dental care that year, Dr. Morgan declared.

Through the recent provision in the health board's budget, dentists will give free service twice a week at twelve clinics in the city.

Dr. Morgan said that the service is needed especially at this time because of the number of persons out of work.

"Deficiencies in family diets often deprive children of calcium and minerals needed for good teeth," the health officer asserted. "If ever there is a time for public dental care it is now."

The greatest trouble comes to children in the sixth year, he said. At this period the first permanent molars are susceptible to decay and should receive treatment.

Dr. Morgan contended that decayed teeth are the foundation for maladies that come later in life, such as rheumatism and heart trouble.

"If we can prevent more serious maladies from developing, a few dollars spent on children for dental care will save the city hospital money later on in surgical treatments," Dr. Morgan said.

The Theatrical World

Robert Montgomery, Miss Patterson Do Fine Work in Comedy, 'Hide-Out'

—BY WALTER D. HICKMAN—

A RACKETEER who never saw milk except in a bottle, nor saw a live chicken of the barnyard variety—that's our hero in "Hide-Out."

Since Robert Montgomery is the racket-agent who forced cabaret and night club owners to send their limousines to a certain laundry, so the gang could demand its protection out of him, the character is well cast.

Montgomery plays the role in a light and high comedy manner when he gets on a farm while hiding out from the coppers. The soil might have done a lot to make a man out of him, but the smile and sincerity of Maureen O'Sullivan probably worked more wonders than anything else.

And when you know that Elizabeth Patterson plays the role of the good housewife, you will realize that this role also is expertly handled. Here is a fine and sincere actress who knows how to make a character live.

"Hide-Out" is a fine date night movie. The story isn't silly and it is good theater of the make-believe type which always is popular on the stage and screen.

Some of the comedy in this one has all of the smart touches of "Thin Man," which was a great hit here.

There are some human situations in "Hide-Out" which probably will make you blink a tear or two, but that won't last long, because you will start laughing again the next second.

I see no reason why this picture should not appeal to the entire family, but adults will like it better. Now at Loew's Palace.

An Object Lesson
The sad but true verdict on "The Scarlet Empress," with Marlene Dietrich as Catherine II, is that here is a mighty tiresome movie with some of the most stupid direction I have ever witnessed.

Miss Dietrich plays the role of Sophia Frederick, who becomes the empress of all the Russians, first as a schoolgirl with one expression, then as the consort of the mad Grand Duke Peter. She first appears in a sort of Mae West impersonation when she gets wise to the way the Russians carry on at court. When she becomes greedy for power, she assumes the cheapness of the street - water's brogue and attitude. Here is cheap acting, and there is no excuse for it.

Yes, Miss Dietrich wears marvelous costumes, but often the director allows the effect to be lost before the backgrounds which make the actors look like puppets. Miss Dietrich is capable of better things than this, but she has failed utterly in trying to play the role of Catherine. Catherine might have been a lot of things, but she never was cheap mentally.

Never have I encountered such cheap conversation on the part of the characters. Even Peter's mistress is made to refer to Empress Elizabeth (Louise Dresser) as an "old bat."

Another sad report is that such a good actress as Louise Dresser is made to act so cheap and vulgar that a burlesque show of fifteen years ago wouldn't stand for the things she does in this picture.

The only saving grace from an acting standpoint is the mad grand duke of Sam Jaffe. Here is a horrible character played masterfully. But even Jaffe is capable of greater things.

Of course, this picture cost a fortune but it is tiresome and dull. Josef Von Sternberg, in my opinion, has made a mess of this one. Be your own judge, as usual. Now at the Circle.

Here Is Howard's Latest
Now comes Leslie Howard in a triviality called "The Lady Is Willing."

To the average American audience, this piece is likely to seem a plodding effort at rollicking comedy. But, we venture, to an English audience with the well-known British

'PALS' TURN ON ALLEGED KILLER OF 'HANDY MAN'

State Smashes at Alibi of Buxom Roadhouse Proprietress.

By United Press
COOPERSTOWN, N. Y., Aug. 27.

—The state smashed away today at the alibi of Mrs. Eva Coo, the "Diamond Lil" of Otsego county, charged with the insurance murder of her handy man, Harry Wright.

Having already presented a powerful case against "Little Eva," Prosecutor Donald H. Grant marshaled witnesses to tear down the alibi he anticipates she will offer in an effort to escape the electric chair.

The trial today entered its third and possibly final week. Mr. Grant expected to present the last of his some seventy odd witnesses by Wednesday. The defense then will present its side. Whereupon the jury will settle the future of the Buxom roadhouse proprietress.

Another of her "pals," this time Mrs. Edna Hanover, youngest and prettiest of the girls at the roadhouse, will testify against her. Already three women she considered her best friends and her lover have contributed to the evidence the state hopes will result in her execution.

Sightseers attracted from an area embracing many hundreds of miles, stormed the tiny courtroom. Over the week-end hundreds climbed Crumhorn mountain to the haunted house where Wright is alleged to have been strung first on the head by a mallet in the hands of "Little Eva," then run over by a car driven by Mrs. Edna Coo, who will be permitted to lead guilty to second-degree murder as a reward for her testimony against Mrs. Coo.

Increased prices for burials proposed by undertakers brought a threat from officials that they would go outside the county for the service. However, undertakers point out that the cost in all likelihood would be the same, as funeral directors of Indiana in general are operating under a code.

Formerly, the price for burial of an adult was $50, and for a child, $20. A new schedule provides for a sliding scale of charges based on sizes of caskets.

Clash on Burial Cost

NEWCASTLE, Aug. 27.—Henry county undertakers apparently have county officials "on the spot" regarding fees for burials of paupers.

Wide Variation in Relief Expenditures Revealed

Outdoor Relief Ranges Widely in Various Counties, Report Shows.

A wide variation in the ratio of relief expenditures in counties and townships was reported today in a study of Indiana public relief by the Indiana state committee on governmental economy.

The reports points out that forty-two years ago the expenditures in Indiana counties for outdoor relief ranged from 4.7 cents in Crawford county to 84.1 cents per capita in Warren county and that in 1933 the comparative ranks remained exactly the same.

The report cites that in a study of 1,016 townships that in 1931 seven townships spent no money for outdoor relief and that one township spent as much as $6.75 per capita.

The average cost to taxpayers increased from $1.79 in 1931 to $2.93 in 1932. Federal aid makes figures later than 1932 incomparable, the report states.

The range of expenditures to the number of persons receiving aid from counties was found to be from $2.19 to $21.92 a person relieved in 1931, or a ratio of one to ten.

The report concludes with a statement, "So apparent has been the need for changes that within the last two years a number of revisions have been made on an emergency basis, without legal changes and with full knowledge that the present abnormal setup is but a bridge to something else."
