

NEW YEAR TO BE USHERED IN BY CITY JEWRY

Rosh Hashanah Rites Will Be Started on Sunday, Sept. 9.

Indianapolis Jewry will join with Judaism the world over in celebration of Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, starting Sunday night, Sept. 9. This date will open the year 5695 of the Hebrew calendar. Reform Judaism devotes one day to observance of the event, while orthodox Jewry gives it two days. Rosh Hashanah is a period for self-examination, self-criticism, repentance, and reconciliation with man and God. The event is a dominant one to world Judaism and it is considered a "new year of the heart," rather than the calendar. Rosh Hashanah, in ancient days when Jewry was primarily agricultural, marked the opening of the economic year when the seeds were sown in the fall. As agriculture declined in importance among the Jewish people, the religious significance of the event steadily increased until today it is primarily a church celebration.

The Theatrical World—A Hint for the Very Adult—See 'Cellini'

THE most consistent sophisticated acting and direction on the legitimate stage comes from the Theater Guild of New York. Those productions usually have the acting services of Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontaine. The only movie I have seen which looked as if it might have come from the workshop of the Guild is "The Affairs of Cellini," a Darryl F. Zanuck production, directed by Gregory La Cava. It is significant that the cast, as far as the leads are concerned, are of Theater Guild size. These two facts make "The Affairs of Cellini" the outstanding sophisticated talking screen has produced thus far. This picture takes a fellow away from the mental ham and cabbage diet and puts him in a theater of magnificent spoofing. Highbrow, you ask? No, it is the Jewish people, the religious significance of the event steadily increased until today it is primarily a church celebration.

Mr. March

Mr. March is the Cellini in this movie. His acting has all the qualities you expect in a Theater Guild production. His makeup is one of the triumphs of the year. He reads his ordinary lines in marvelous style and when he recites love poetry—well, the love heat is on. Although March is magnificent, it is Frank Morgan as Alessandro, the philandering but hen-pecked Duke of Florence, who walks away with all the acting honors. I've moved Mr. Morgan into my private hall of fame and there he will stay as Alessandro as long as I live. Watch his sputtering and confusion when he faces his court, but especially when he faces his duchess, played in a beautiful and tantalizing way by Constance Bennett. One of the smartest naughty scenes done in splendid taste is when both the duchess and the duke are entertaining their sweeties under the same roof. And glory be, they both have their sweeties when the story ends. Fay Wray plays in frigid style the dumb and not-too-willing-to-learn sweetie of both the duke and Cellini. Sssh! This one is for adults, the very adult. Don't miss it because you will feel that you have been on a week's vacation after seeing it. I saw it at a preview. It opens tomorrow at Loew's Palace.

With the task of working out a plan whereby home owners, whose taxes are delinquent, may be granted through loans through the federal housing program, has been delegated to R. Earl Peters, Ft. Wayne, who assumed his new job as associate director of the Indiana program yesterday. Under a recent federal law, loans can not be made to persons whose property taxes are delinquent. At the same time, there is an Indiana law which grants persons who paid 1932 taxes an extension of time to pay previous delinquent taxes. With thousands of property owners in Indiana affected by the conflicting laws, and many of them seeking federal housing loans, some plan must be worked out, Mr. Peters said, after a conference with Fred Hoke, director of the Indiana program. May Succeed Hoke Mr. Peters established his offices in the same building with Mr. Hoke. Although his position is that of associate director, he virtually is in full charge of the housing program. Mr. Hoke is expected to resign from his federal relief connections early next month, turning over the work to Mr. Peters. The Indiana program calls for a state-wide survey of housing conditions in an effort to determine the number and the amounts of loans which will be needed to finance building and improvement projects. The surveys are expected to be made by FEHA labor through approval of state relief agencies. Skilled Workers Get Jobs Use of men from state employment service lists will be tried in Marion county first, Mr. Hoke said. If the plan is successful here, it will be used in other sections of the state. Skilled workmen in the building trades will be placed on housing projects, and when the plan is extended throughout the state, thousands of unemployed men in that line of work are expected to be given jobs. Funds for remodeling and building programs by home owners are to be furnished through loans from private banks and trust companies. The loans, approved by the federal housing administration, will be protected by federal insurance. A majority of Indiana banks and trust companies have agreed to participate in the plan, Mr. Hoke said.

HOME OWNERS HERE TO JOIN IN U. S. DRIVE

20 Per Cent Anxious to Get Housing Act Funds, Survey Shows.

Almost 20 per cent of the home owners of Indianapolis are anxious to take advantage of the opportunity offered by the "reconstruct, remodel and repair" campaign of the state housing administration. This figure was arrived at following a survey in eight typical districts of the city in which persons in all financial classifications were canvassed. Results of the survey indicate that Indianapolis needs at least 15,400 paint jobs, 8,200 structural changes, 2,700 new roofs, 1,900 heating plant repairs, 1,330 repairs to plumbing, 3,100 interior decorating jobs and 3,330 miscellaneous repairs. "If needed work all could be gotten actively under way, it would furnish employment for every idle artisan in the building trades in Indianapolis for many months," said Walter B. Harding, president of the United States Tire Company and The Harding Advertising Company, whose selection as chairman for the campaign was announced today. "The new housing act," said Mr. Harding, "makes available to the average home owner channels of credit that have been closed to him. I am sure that it will receive hearty public support."
