

RESIGNATIONS ADD FUEL TO NRA TROUBLES

Two High Officials Quit as
New Enforcement Plans
Are Laid.

(Copyright, 1934, by United Press)
WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—Beset by new resignations, trouble-tossed NRA shouldered forward today with plans for stiffer code enforcement, possibly through the medium of a "Little NRA."

The recovery agency, in throes of great controversy centering about General Hugh S. Johnson, was revealed to be moving forward in spite of difficulties with a proposed compliance drive.

The campaign would be directed through a "Little NRA"—regional headquarters established in twelve cities so that enforcement officers could localize their efforts and take account of special conditions.

News of the new drive accompanied the revelation that William V. Lawson, press relations director who has guided the NRA through many fiery difficulties, is resigning tomorrow. Meantime, Colonel George A. Lynch, General Johnson's right-hand man and administrative officer, is preparing to return to army service in thirty days.

Miss Robinson in Squabble
Resignation of Mr. Lawson caused a flutter of comment, featured by open belief that Miss Marshall Coles, Mr. Lawson's titian-haired, globe-trotting assistant, was "Bobby's" candidate for the job.

"Bobby" is Miss Frances Robinson, General Johnson's most intimate adviser, first a secretary and later executive assistant at a salary equally his before he got a $9,000 raise.

She is credited with an active part in much of the controversy which has all but obscured the major efforts of NRA toward fostering national recovery; particularly with urging the administrator to resign when it seemed his control would be ended if the President approved reorganization plans submitted by other advisers.

When Mr. Roosevelt soothed Johnson's feelings and sent him off with his family, for two weeks at the grashore, Miss Robinson stayed behind at General Johnson's request, she said, although she always accompanies the general on business trips.

"Hopelessly Confused"
She was named on a temporary administrative board to govern NRA during the administrator's absence. Labor Secretary Frances Perkins and Donald R. Richberg, head of the national emergency council, are refusing to discuss the row which developed over NRA reorganization plans, except for the latter's comment that the issues are "hopelessly confused."

All agree on one thing—the unswerving loyalty of Miss Robinson to the Johnson cause. Leon Henderson, research and planning director, who was revealed as having submitted his resignation weeks ago, still is prepared to leave whenever his views and General Johnson's fail to coincide.

Mr. Henderson came to Washington last winter as a caustic critic of NRA. He is an economist of years' experience with Russell Sage Foundation. When General Johnson invited him to criticize NRA "from the inside," he was named to direct research and planning.

Lawson Gets New Job
Although he has not hesitated to challenge General Johnson's views, the administrator has demonstrated his faith in Mr. Henderson by giving him great responsibility. Mr. Henderson sees the divergence between General Johnson and Mr. Richberg as based on the former's desire for individual methods of control applied to each industry, contrasted with the latter's platform of requiring all industries to conform to one national policy.

An NRA report prepared by Mr. Henderson and unchanged by General Johnson, was incorporated in Mr. Richberg's survey of New Deal accomplishments submitted to the President early this week.

Lynch, whose impending resignation became known today, had had some time in order to continue NRA service. Mr. Lawson is giving up the press relations post tomorrow to accept a flattering offer from the Cotton Textile Institute, where he will be public relations assistant to George A. Sloan, the institute director and cotton textile code authority chairman.

Could Not Sleep With Pain Of Eczema. Healed by Cuticura.

"My daughter had weeping eczema on her face. It began with large, watery, crusted eruptions and her face was almost covered with them. The itching and burning were so severe that I threatened to tie her hands to keep her from scratching. She could not sleep for the pain, and she was so disfigured she was almost ashamed to be seen. They relieved the pain at once, and after using one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment she was healed." (Signed) Mrs. J. W. Cuthbertson, Kearney, Mo., Jan. 6, 1934.
