

Symphony Campaign Announced

Members Will Be Sought by State Society in October.

BY BEATRICE BURGESS

MRS. HERBERT WOOLLEN is approaching the fall membership drive of the Indiana State Symphony Society with the enthusiasm which prevails after a vacation of rest and entertainment. She returned last week from Les Cheneaux Islands, Michigan. Her telephone has been busy as she contacted the team captains, whom she will lead for another year.

This year's season should be unusually successful she promised. Ferdinand Schaefer, director, returned last week-end from a summer vacation in Germany. He led the orchestra practice yesterday at the Athenaeum with new vigor, born of the joy in visiting famous foreign music centers and festivals.

"The society will offer the only orchestral symphonies this winter, for no out-of-town orchestras have been booked and there will be no civic music series," Mrs. Woollen explained. As usual several out-of-town concerts will be given; already engagements have been booked at Muncie and Purdue university.

Teams to Meet

Mrs. Woollen still is forming teams, which will meet on Sunday, Sept. 23, before the campaign opening Oct. 1. Mrs. Woollen will be hostess at her home in Golden Hill. The following night the captains and their workers will gather in the auditorium of the American Central Life Insurance Company.

In addition to selecting membership leaders, Mrs. Woollen has been choosing speakers for pep luncheons to be held during the campaign week.

Yacht Race Is Reminder of Most Expensive Hobby

BY MRS. C. O. ROBINSON
Times Hobby Editor

FOR those who man the boats, yacht racing is the most exciting of all sports, but unfortunately only a favored few can indulge in it as an active hobby. As spectators, however, every one may enjoy it. The spreading clouds of sail on lofty spars against a background of sky and water make an exceedingly beautiful panorama of action, thrilling and picturesque.

When a race represents a traditional contest between English and American yachtsmen, it becomes of intense interest to the entire nation as well as the world of sportsmen. Such a race will begin on Saturday of this week, weather permitting, when two tall masted Class J sloops spread their sails over a thirty-mile course off Newport, R. I., in the first heat of the sixteenth contest for the America's Cup. The yacht winning four of seven races will be the victor.

This is the most expensive single sporting event in the world as the cost of the yachts and their upkeep runs into millions of dollars.

It also is the greatest of all yachting events and is the culmination of a summer of exciting elimination races, involving some of the fastest and largest yachts afloat, to prove the ones worthy of being the British challenger and the American defender.

The Endeavour, owned by Thomas Octave Murdoch Sopwith, a British airplane manufacturer, is the challenger this year and the defender is Rainbow, built for a New York Yacht Club syndicate headed by Harold S. Vanderbilt, who in 1930, commanded the last defender, Enterprise.

The America's Cup is only the ornate silver ewer, here shown, which originally cost but 100 guineas, but it is the oldest and most famous trophy in the world. Although it has no great intrinsic value, it stands for international sportsmanship and sailing supremacy, and never has left the New York Yacht Club since it was won eighty-three years ago in a race off Cowes, England, by the schooner America which was owned by a group of New York Yacht Club members.

IN 1851, the America was taken across the Atlantic to challenge the best British yacht but as she could find no single opponent, was entered on Aug. 22, 1851, in the Royal Yacht Squadron race around the Isle of Wight. Much to the consternation of the squadron members and Queen Victoria, who was watching the regatta, the America won by great odds over the fast British entries and brought the Royal Squadron cup to America. The Currier and Ives print, here shown, was made of the victorious America in 1851, and is today one of the rarest and most valuable of those old lithographs.

In 1857 the owners of the America presented the cup, now designated as the America's cup, to the New York Yacht Club to be held as an international trophy. Including the five attempts by the plucky Irish baronet, the late Sir Thomas Lipton, the British have made fourteen unsuccessful efforts to recover the trophy. The first challenge was offered in 1868 when their yacht Cambria was required to race against the entire New York Yacht Club fleet.

They tried again in 1870 and the Canadians took up the challenge in 1875 and 1881. In 1885 the British re-entered the contest with the Genesta, which was defeated by the Puritan, designed by Edward Burgess father of W. Starling Burgess who designed the present defender, Rainbow, and the last defender, Enterprise.

The elder Burgess designed the next two winners, the Mayflower in 1886, and the Volunteer in 1887. In 1893 the Earl of Dunraven's Valkyrie II was defeated by the Vigilant, the first of the great line of Herreshoff sloops.

Lord Dunraven returned with Valkyrie III in 1895, but went home in a pique, causing the Royal Yacht Squadron to cease contesting. In 1899, the Royal Ulster Yacht Squadron challenger was Shamrock I, owned by Sir Thomas Lipton. Incidentally Shamrock I was wrecked only last August in the Indian ocean while carrying a scientific expedition.

SIR THOMAS tried again in 1901 and 1903, the last race with professional pilots. The World war intervened and the contest was not renewed until 1920, when Shamrock IV was defeated by Resolute, commanded by Charles Francis Adams, later to become secretary of the navy.

In 1930 Sir Thomas made his last attempt to capture "that old mug" as he called it, but Harold S. Vanderbilt, at the helm of the Enterprise, maintained American tradition. Again this year the fate of the cup will be in his hands, and very competent ones they are since yachting has been his major hobby for many years.

The Rainbow is as perfect as experience, science and the Herreshoff shipyards at Bristol, R. I., can make her. She is plated with steel above the water, bronze below, with a duralumin mast. Authorities assert that she will have the most severe struggle that any defender ever has faced, for the Royal Yacht Squadron has returned to the contest after thirty-nine years with Sopwith's supreme Endeavour and with Sopwith himself as skipper, a formidable combination. The Endeavour is built entirely of steel, she flies specially woven sails and she carries airplane navigating instruments including a wind gauge invented by Mr. Sopwith.

ALTHOUGH a newcomer to yachting in comparison with Mr. Vanderbilt, Mr. Sopwith is a designer and builder who understands his ship and the winds and tides that beset her. He is one of the first airplane pilots in the British Isles and chose yachting as a hobby because sailing and flying are kindred sports where knowledge of the varying phases of the winds is both a necessity and a lure. Mrs. Sopwith also is interested ardently in the sport and as timekeeper will be the first woman ever to act on the crew in a cup race.

Although Indianapolis is an inland city many of her citizens are yachting enthusiasts who will be intensely interested in the cup race. Especially interested will be members of the Maxinkuckee Yacht Club under their commodore, C. Harvey Bradley; William Munk, vice commodore, and Dr. J. Ray Newcomb, fleet commander, have their own thrilling races for the Winslow cup. These devotees of yachting join with all patriotic Americans in the earnest wish that the Endeavour, a worthy and alarming opponent, will return to England satisfied with her effort, but defeated.

A Woman's Viewpoint

BY MRS. WALTER FERGUSON

Your opinions for or against what you read in this column always are welcome. Comment from readers on the problems under discussion is encouraged.

My Dear Obnoxious Person—You are not game to print this one in your column. I dare you! Ha! You can't take it. You are supposed to write advice to innocent young girls which should guide them from vile and wicked thoughts. Instead you advocate openly free love. Imagine telling "Sorry" what you did! What kind of an advisor are you? I am a modern mother with two boys and two sweet sisters. How I dread for them to ever read such slush as you fill up space with! Cheap, tawdry, free love, and then you tell them their lives are not wrecked. Why they give you space no one knows. You should read good, logical advice like what Dorothy Dix writes, or even Mae West. Can you possibly come out of the gutter before some one else takes your position away from you? You may deceive yourself and a few of your kind, but not mothers and sisters who have other things to do than read your filthy column. You have no right in a respectable family paper. Every one has his opinion as to you and the quicker you get out the better. You should be arrested for contributing to the delinquency of minors.

Jane Jordan

Theodore Dreiser is far too deep for you to understand and you smudge his name when you misquote him. Any editor of intelligence and moral uplift would not print your cheap trash. Here's hoping you get out of a paper young boys and girls enjoy.

DISGUSTED.
Answer—I have stated over and over again that mere freedom in love is exceptionally disappointing as a mode of life. Disillusionment and not fulfillment results from the casting off of all restraints and inhibitions.

The person who has engaged in a sordid series of trivial affairs awakens in time to a dismayed recognition of the fact that he is emotionally unstable, socially irresponsible, a disappointment to himself, and a person deprived of the respect and confidence of his comrades.

The conventions can not be ignored entirely in establishing a plan of life. The opinion of one's friends, children, employers and employees weighs an unescapable influence in the making or breaking of personality. What the community regards as admirable, beautiful, sane or vile has a definite bearing upon the happiness of each of its members.

The young girl reared in our society who is discovered in a sexual lapse, suffers from excruciating feelings of guilt and abasement. The inconsistency between her behavior and what she was taught to believe produces a

DEFEATED MOTHER.
Answer—The stubborn insistence of the parent on purposes inconsistent with those of the child is apt to give rise to serious personality disorders. You should not expect to gratify your own needs through your daughter. I do not know whether she would make a good actress or not, but I do know that she will not make a good writer if you force her into a profession which she definitely does not wish to adopt.

Advance of Food Prices Reflected in Class at Banner-Whitehill Store

Less Costly Items Will Be Emphasized in Home Making Center Instruction; Project Studied in Other Cities.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

INCREASE in the price of foods will play a definite part in the planning of the programs for the home making center of the Banner-Whitehill Company this season, according to Mrs. J. R. Farrell, director. Because the center is primarily for the purpose of aiding women in moderate circumstances to provide meals in keeping with their budgets, menus will be planned containing low priced foods.

Mrs. Farrell, in outlining the program for the season, which opened formally last Thursday, pointed out that cheaper cuts of meat and low priced foods often are as nutritious, if not more so, than the more costly items, and can be made as attractive and appetizing.

"We will advocate the use of lard substitutes in many instances, since the price of lard and all pork products has increased to such an extent," Mrs. Farrell said.

Last week's menu was centered about a meat loaf which was made in a hollowed-out bread crust. Mrs. Farrell advised her class that this dish could be prepared just as effectively with cheaper cuts of meat.

The home-making center is of interest not only to Indianapolis citizens, but to individuals and organizations in other cities.

A special guest at last Thursday's class was Mrs. Marguerite Worth, Cleveland, specialist in labor saving equipment and member of the Electrical League of Cleveland. Mrs. Worth had been sent to Indianapolis by the league to sit in as an interested listener at the initial meeting of this season's cooking course.

New Decorations Win Approval
Former members of Banner-Whitehill classes were pleased with the new decorations which have been completed in the auditorium and home-making center.

The auditorium, where lectures and card parties are held by various organizations, has been redecorated with light gray walls, and ceiling in soft green. The lighting fixtures are silver, and red chintz draperies with a white calla lily design are used at the windows.

Tables are in black and green, with the chairs finished in a warm shade of red lacquer.

The lecture room and demonstration kitchen have been redecorated in black and orange, and the model home kitchen, where labor saving devices and equipment are displayed, was refurnished in a decorative scheme of cherry and blue.

The breakfast room has been done in provincial style, with attractive green chintz curtains and cherry furniture.

The classes in the home-making center, under the direction of Mrs. Farrell, will be held each Thursday afternoon, from 2 to 4. Following the classes, tea is served.
