WESTFIELD GAY AS CENTENNIAL PROGRAM OPENS

Colorful Pageant, Exhibits Feature Three-Day Celebration.

WESTFIELD, Ind., Oct. 5.—Rolling back the years in a colorful pageant and diversified exhibits, which brought memories of log cabins, the underground railway, and the solemnity of early Quaker meetings as well as modern gaiety, this city today began its three-day centennial celebration.

From every section of Hoosierdom as well as from out-state, old residents of the city came to take part in the one hundredth anniversary of the settlement of Westfield.

United States highway 31 was decorated like a world's fair midway with bunting and carnival trappings.

A snake dance and parade by the Westfield high school and its band featured this afternoon's session of the fête.

At the same time, judges strolled among the competitors displaying canned goods, cakes, needlework—gracing the winners with prize ribbons.

Carnival on Program Housewives forgot their Friday cleaning. Merchants left cash registers in the hands of employees, as under the auspices of the Westfield Lions Club and the Union high school committee, the city lit its birthday cake with red and white banners on utility poles, and thrilled to band music.

A balloon ascension and carnival acts were part of the afternoon's program as hundreds of motorists from Indianapolis and Noblesville joined in the little city's celebration.

Laid out in May, 1834, the town became from the start one of the largest Quaker communities in the state.

"Underground Railway" Station One of the most important stations of the state's "underground railway" to aid escaping slaves, was established here in pre-Civil war days. Asa Beals, one of the town's founders, was its manager.

Tomorrow a pageant, portraying the town's life from the days of this underground railway and of the circuit-riding minister to the present, will be presented. Clubs, schools and business firms will have floats entered in a parade, which is a part of this pageant.

Feature of the afternoon's celebration tomorrow will be the Westfield-Kirklin high school football game with the carnival holding the spotlight at night.

Speakers will review the town's history during the three days' celebration.

Churches of the city will hold home-coming services on Sunday with a picnic on the Union high school campus for the alumni in the afternoon. Edgar Llewellyn, Newcastle schools superintendent, and a former resident of Westfield, will be the principal speaker at the picnic.
