

Rabbit and Quail to Be Hunted Soon

Several City Men Waiting With Dogs for Start of Season.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

THE hunters and their faithful friends, the hunting dogs, literally are on their toes for the opening of the quail season on Saturday and rabbit hunting on Monday. Many of the dogs have been in kennels during the closed season, where they have been kept in training.

Masters and dogs alike are eagerly awaiting the opening of the season, and the crisp frosty mornings arouse fervent urges to start in pursuit of scampering rabbits or to flush a covey of quail.

Dr. B. K. Westfall owns three aristocrats of the breed. His English setters, Blazer and Pat, are litter mates and direct descendants of Countess, claimed to be one of the greatest English setters. Dr. Westfall has a collection of ribbons which the dogs have won in bench events and field trials, in which judging is under natural shooting conditions. They have won awards for retrieving the greatest number of birds at the all-American field trials in various quail districts in other states.

The dogs are rangy and powerful, pure white and tipped in spots with brown. They are with Dr. Westfall a few days before he and Dr. Raymond Beeler go to Rensselaer for quail hunting next week-end. Dr. Westfall is anticipating a good hunt.

George L. Denny and his English setter, Tad, will go quail hunting Saturday near Bloomington, Ind. Denny usually goes with Mr. Denny to one of the gun clubs he frequents, the skeet fields of Crows Nest and the Indianapolis Gun Club.

Mr. Eveleigh hunts quail with his setter, Winchell. C. Willis Adams, who frequently goes with Dr. Westfall, and Mr. Denny, has just received a big pointer from the south. Pointers, we are told, have short hair in contrast to the long hair of the setter.

When Dr. Glenn J. Pell goes into the field, he is accompanied by an English setter. One of the veteran quail gunners in this territory is Dr. Thomas Noble Sr., whose setter, Sport Hunters Delight, has won many trophies. Dr. Noble's kennel also includes several bird dogs.

Mrs. Hathaway, who has been several years a member of the club, hunts with Mr. Simmons. Jenny, their English setter, has the reputation of scenting quail if they are any place in the field.

Solution to Previous Contract Problem.
BY W. E. MCKENNEY
Secretary American Bridge League

I RECENTLY was asked: "Does slam bidding play an important part in bridge tournaments?" After carefully thinking the question over, my answer is, it does.

In the first place, the majority of hands we bid are for game only, and the bid for game is a familiar procedure to most players; but slam hands are the exception. In a session of thirty boards, there may not be more than one slam hand. Scarcely you will find more than three. Does it require finer play to make a slam than a game? Yes, decidedly so, because the declarer at a game contract can lay his plans so that, if one line of play fails, he can fall back on another. But at slam contract, he can lose only one trick.

Usually this is lost in the early stages of the play and he can not try anything else. His line of play then has to be accurate.

Manners and Morals

BY JANE JORDAN

If you are confused about your problems, talk them out with Jane Jordan. Put your case in a letter today and read your answer in a few days. Your problem can be rearranged so that it will not be recognized.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am a girl of 20 and have been engaged for some time to a boy whom I thought was the greatest man on earth. I knew him and his family well, and we never quarreled. He has promised that he will do right from now on; that he will show me he can do what is right. Of course, I will take him a long time to pay his debts and it would be quite a while before we could marry now. Should I go ahead as if nothing had happened, or should I turn him down?

Of course, every one will be against him now. Would it be right to turn him down when he is already down? Or should I try to help him to get on the right road? He wants me to stand by him, but he wanted me to be honest with myself and do what is best for me. There is a saying, "Lift up the falling ones." He says he loves me and I love him. He said he was forced into it and was made to promise never to tell. I will be glad to have your advice.

Answer—The saying that bids you lift up the falling ones does not stipulate that you should marry them and spend the rest of your life in the lifting process. I am not at all impressed with this young man's promises to reform, for he has not yet shouldered the responsibility for what he did, but comforts himself with statement that somebody else was to blame. He has promised to do right from now on, and no unstable person is strengthened one whit by his own fine promises.

You have here a young man who doubts his ability to compete with other men for a livelihood. Because he doubts that he can succeed by legitimate effort, he uses his energies to outwit. The same energies, turned into useful channels, would have brought results.

After all re-education of such a character is a job for an expert, not a girl in love. The man who looks to a woman for his strength is a baby and a weakling, foredoomed to defeat. It is the task of each human being to assume the responsibility for his own acts, and to learn to live without refuge.

In turning the young man down you force him to face the consequences of his own acts. You are neither heartless nor unchristian. You merely withhold unearned benefits from him. Every woman who marries has a right to expect a responsible attitude on the part of her partner. To accept less merely argues that she holds herself in low esteem, and mates with her inferior to increase her own prestige by comparison.

Dear Jane Jordan—I am a girl of 16. I have been going with a boy seven months. I think I am in love with him. At first we had three and four dates a week, but lately he hasn't wanted dates so often. I heard through a friend that he has had a date with a girl he used to go with, and I understand that he went with her just to spite me. He asked me to drop him a card next week. Should I or not?

Should I get in touch with him, or is he worth it? Do you think I am too young to go steady? Once he told me that as long as he could go with me that he wouldn't go back to this girl. I'm thinking of him all the time. But am I wasting my time?

Answer—If you will accept this boy on his own terms without being upset by his infantile efforts to make you jealous, perhaps you can have a very pleasant time with him. But if you are at all possessive instinct is so strong in a woman that she thinks if a boy calls on her she has an option on his time.

What difference does it make if he sees the other girl. You should be seeing other boys, too. At your age, both of you should see as many boys and girls as possible in order to have as wide a love choice as possible. It is folly to go steady.

Peterson and Captain Fred G. French of Philadelphia to win the eastern Pennsylvania mixed-pair championship. This is the second time Mrs. Peterson has held the title, having won it last year with the late Milton C. Work.

EAST's opening lead was the jack of clubs. Captain French, in the North, was the declarer. Before playing to the first trick, he took inventory; five spade tricks, possibly four heart tricks, one diamond and one club.

Where was he going to get the 'twelfth trick? Of course, if West held the king of diamonds, the diamond finesse would give him the first trick.

Now he ran off five spades and four heart tricks, being careful to keep in his own hand a small club. This left him with the ace-jack of diamonds and the five of clubs.

Of course, East had to bear down to the king-six of diamonds and the ten-spot of clubs. Captain French then led a club, which East was forced to win with the ten, and then he had to lead from his king-six of diamonds into declarer's ace-jack. This play gave the declarer his contract.

extra trick, but if it failed, the contract would be defeated.

Captain French decided to play the hand without the diamond finesse. He went up with the queen of clubs in dummy to kill West's king. In other words, he had to start to plan his end play on the first trick.

Now he ran off five spades and four heart tricks, being careful to keep in his own hand a small club. This left him with the ace-jack of diamonds and the five of clubs.

Women Given to Travel on Extensive Scale Use Simple Packing Methods

Trick Suit Cases Avoided by Mary Lewis, Who Goes to Europe; Ruth Page, Dancer, Fights Shy of Trunks.

BY HELEN LINDSAY

THE average stay-at-home woman, whose trips are limited to summer vacations and occasional jaunts to visit relatives or attend club conventions, looks upon packing luggage as a serious task. While it still is a complex problem, some of the famous women globe trotters of America have perfected a technique of travel, and have worked out a sensible system of packing.

Description of their methods, which will be copied by other women, are described in the November House Beautiful.

Mary Lewis, vice-chairman of a New York store, who practically commutes to Europe, travels light by leaving home all the trick suitcases, fitted bags and gadgets that her friends give her. In her trunk she stows away a duffel bag that can be used as a catch-all later. She never forgets cleansing tissue, a gargle, dark glasses and a typewriter, and always ties a colored ribbon on the loop of her trunk so she can spot it anywhere.

Grace Allen, radio star, identifies her trunk easily because it is painted white. She easily can find her personal possessions inside, because she packs certain hard-to-find articles in cellophane envelopes. Nightgowns, underwear, gloves and accessories are stowed away in different colored silk envelopes.

Ruth Page, dancer, daughter of Mrs. Lafayette Page, Indianapolis, also leaves fancy baggage at home, and travels only with her fiber suitcases and fiber trunk. When she goes on an extended tour she fills them with good clothes that will stand up under climatic conditions and hard wear. Any purchases she makes she has sent home directly, so she does not accumulate cargo as she goes.

Grace Moore, opera singer and motion picture star, who will thrill Indianapolis theater-goers Sunday with her lovely voice, takes her own sheets with her when she travels. Miss Moore also has a special atomizer for spraying her throat.

Mrs. Marshall Field always carries a smart red morocco bag that looks like a pillow bag, but is quite apt to contain magazines, bottles and various odds and ends.

Wardrobe Suitcases Liked by Helen Hicks

HELEN HICKS, golfer, travels with two types of clothes, sports and evening frocks, and packs them in wardrobe suitcases. An extra pocket in her golf bag takes care of two extra pairs of golf shoes. Carola de Peyster Kip, beauty editor, always takes a wardrobe trunk for anything less than a week-end, and packs everything methodically in the trays so that she needs only to transfer the trays to dresser drawers.

Consolation rather than inspiration results from studying the packing methods of Neysa McMein, the artist. She always takes so many games and books that she has to stuff her clothes in anywhere they will go. Unpacking for Miss McMein consists in stirring the contents of her bag until the desired object comes to the top. For long trips, however, she makes sure she has a black dress and a black coat, a white dress and a white coat, and shoes to match each outfit, and she puts these together in every possible combination.

Rubinstein Articles for Travel Offered

THE importance of having all necessary articles available in traveling has inspired the creation of a collection of travel cases for toilet articles by Helena Rubinstein. The new articles in the toilet goods department of L. S. Ayres & Co. are luxurious yet practical. The woman traveler can take her choice of kits intended for travel by land, sea or air, for Madame Rubinstein has taken into consideration all modern traveling problems in planning them.

The airplane beauty kit is compact, and appropriately covered with airplane cloth, with red, peach or canary weatherproof lining. It provides a complete wardrobe. For the cruise, Madame Rubinstein presents a bag in fine cape seal grain, black or cocoa brown, which is silk lined. They contain six creams and lotions to protect the skin in sun and sea, and five cosmetics for complete make-up.

The Bon Voyage beauty box is in full grain cowhide, ecru lizard grain and lined in silk. It can be obtained in brown with more lining, blue or black with beige more lining, and green or natural lizard with gray more lining. This kit contains nineteen selected beauty creations and make-up, the bottles all in crystal and gilt.

Another of the traveling kits was designed for a princess in Paris. It contains twenty-four beauty aids, and a three-piece sterling silver toilet set, consisting of hair brush and comb and clothes brush. There is even a clasp snap included in this equipment. The case is of ecru finish, imported pigskin lined with silk. This can be obtained in blue, tan or black, with honey dew lining, and green or natural lizard with gray lining.
