

EMPLOYERS AND RICHBERG SPLIT ON NRA FUTURE

Conflicting Views Presage Bitter Congress Fight on Labor.

By United Press WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—Recovery co-ordinator Donald Richberg and the National Association of Manufacturers today presented contrasting opinions on section 7A of the recovery act which emphasized the difficulties congress will meet when it attacks NRA reorganization.

In parallel expressions, both made in New York, Mr. Richberg and the directors of the manufacturers group outlined their ideas of what should be done with NRA. The views coincided on only a few points.

The manufacturers suggested a divorce of labor reforms such as the child labor ban, hours and wages provisions and section 7A from legislation regarding fair trade practices.

Favors NRA Principles

Mr. Richberg favored a law continuing the basic principles of the NRA. He would divide it into four sections:

1. Fixing of minimum wages and maximum hours.

2. Elimination of dishonest business practices.

3. Exact reports on production, prices, wages, employment and general economic conditions.

4. Freedom of agreement between employers and employees.

Speaking before the Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America, Mr. Richberg presented one of the most thorough discussions of NRA's section 7A ever made by a high administration figure.

He blamed conflicts over the law to evasion of its principles by both industry and labor.

Recalls Old Conflicts

"Unfortunately," he said, "section 7A was written against the background of a long, continued struggle in this country over the right of reorganization of labor organizations.

In the ensuing contest many representatives of both interests have ignored and violated the principle that voluntary organization should be the basis of collective bargaining."

Replying to criticism that the law does not directly prohibit coercion by unions, Mr. Richberg declared:

"To those employers who ask for a law to prevent workers from being forced by unlawful threats and violence to join organizations against their will, I would point out that such activities are already prohibited by law."

Houde Ruling Interpreted

He said he believed opposition by employers to the majority rule laid down by the national labor relations board in the Houde case resulted from misunderstanding.

The fact is that the board explicitly stated: "This opinion lays down no rule as to what should constitute the proper unit as the basis of representation," Mr. Richberg said.

The manufacturers' suggestions urged divorce of labor reforms from trade practices, because doubtful constitutionality of the former might impair the whole program. They said the labor codes had been sustained thus far only on an emergency basis.

ERROR IS CORRECTED ON MURDER REPORT

John T. Jameson Made No Comment Involving Slayer.

The Indianapolis Times wishes to correct a misstatement in its story yesterday of the murder of Mrs. Pauline Dowden Williams that John T. Jameson, nephew of Booth Tarkington and treasurer of the Equitable Securities Company, 4400 Broadway, had commented to The Times on the mental condition of Harvey Talbot, held as the murderer.

Tuesday night, shortly after the murder, a group of Times reporters, working at adjoining desks, placed telephone calls to several men who had known Talbot at Princeton university. Mr. Jameson was called but was not available and made no comment of any kind to this paper. As his name was being checked off a master list, the statement erroneously attributed to him was obtained from another Princeton man. The Times regrets the error.

ASYLUM URGED FOR KILLER BY VICTIM'S MATE

Slain Woman to Be Buried Today; Murderer in Critical Condition.

With her slayer, socialist Harvey Talbot, in a critical condition at city hospital, Mrs. Pauline Dowden Williams, murdered Tuesday night in her apartment at 30½ West St. Joseph street, was buried today as her husband, Clarence Williams, 1039 Congress avenue, prepared to press action looking to Talbot's commitment to an institution for the criminally insane.

Talbot, 47 and eccentric, mortally wounded Mrs. Williams, 47, his sister-in-law and the housekeeper for the Glenn Martin and Livingstone apartments, on the southeast corner of Meridian and St. Joseph streets, after a two-hour discussion in one of the Glenn Martin suites.

Tells of Drink

He followed her across to the West St. Joseph street apartments, which she rented to enable her to stay near her work several nights a week, and shot her there after she had given him a "big drink" of whisky because he felt "so bad." Then, he returned to the Glenn Martin and, after threatening several persons there, shot himself in the head.

Mr. Williams' intention to prosecute Talbot was revealed in his statement last night to Detective Lieutenant Michael Hynes, who is in charge of the investigation into the shooting. The widower protested again and again that he could assign no motive for the shooting and said that he had long considered Talbot "dangerous."

"I can not give you any reason for the shooting as Mrs. Williams was the finest woman in the world," Talbot told Lieutenant Hynes in a statement from his city hospital bed last night.

Repeats Story

He repeated to Lieutenant Hynes the story of the drink and of his sudden impulse to commit suicide, which ended instead in Mrs. Williams' murder, a story which he had told earlier in the day to The Indianapolis Times.

Talbot's fatal call on Mrs. Williams Tuesday afternoon was his first visit to the Glenn Martin in more than a year, he said, adding that he had been in the neighborhood on business at the time of the visit. He said his depressed condition was due to worry over finances and the condition of his health and insisted he had no memory of the actual shooting.
