

Parents Hurt by Tyranny of Children

Two Plays on Broadway Portray Two Types of Problem.

BY HELEN WELSHIMER
NEA Service Staff Writer

THE problem child is doing her stunt for Broadway audiences these nights. "Her" stunt, we say, for the two plays which dramatize the attempt of a child to make others play the game her way are girls. Small boys, being less introspective as a rule, aren't so interested or involved in the affairs of their elders.

Helen Welshimer

The two problem girls are not alike. One is as sensitive as the other is insensitive and cruel. One is artistic, loyal and suffering. The other is a brat, an imp of Satan from which there can come no good and who should have been fettered with corrective weights before she cut her wishing teeth.

"Birthright" is the English play portraying an adolescent daughter torn by emotion because she objects to her widowed mother's marriage to a gallantly fine and unselfish man. The girl treasures a false memory of her mother's romance with her dead father, and borders on suicide. Fortunately the marriage had been performed before the mother learned what an unnatural state she had fostered in her daughter through desire to shield the child.

The mother's duty to the child, you ask? To marry the man? To give the girl a father's companionship and to make her realize that no life can completely possess another that has any qualities worth possessing. The world in which we live has never been described as an heavenly annex. We have to make adjustments. And we'll do it more easily if we do it honestly.

Honesty Lacking
Had the mother let her daughter know from the beginning that her idealized father had been a synthetic conception of love, the girl would have been prepared for a normal sequence of events. For that matter, so long as her mother's happiness was being increased through the second marriage, the adolescent daughter should have danced at the wedding. She would not have had been treated with honesty.

A mother is a woman, a father is a man, before donning the robes of parenthood. There is no more reason why a child should clutter and bind a parent's life than there is for a parent to put a restricting hand on the child's life so long as the new experience is honest and honorable and bodes good. If it doesn't, that is something apart from this discussion.

Specializes in Lies
The second play, "The Children's Hour," presents a problem that is distinctly different.

Here we have a boarding school child, Satan's favorite daughter, well instructed in his arts, determined to get her own way even if it means inventing lies that break lives, twist souls, and work upheaval that will not come out all right in the last act no matter how it is prolonged.

The unnatural relation of which she accuses two young teachers is a theme of its own. It is the vicious framework of lies that is our problem.

Children do not have a background of comparative experiences against which to form judgments. Not having lived long enough to live fully, not being emotionally or mentally adult, how can they know which action is best?

A guardian's duty is to train children for clear thinking, honest living, and respect for the decisions of those in command, so long as they are wise and worthy decisions.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Ann Hollister breaks her engagement to Tony Mickle the same day that Peter Kendal tells Valeria Beach that his fiancée, that everything is over between them. Ann believes he still loves Tony and Peter and Peter asks Ann to marry him the same day.

She goes to Florida and is happy there. Then Peter is recalled home. His family makes trouble between Ann and Peter. She succeeds finally and Ann goes away, leaving no trace of her whereabouts. Peter, desperately in love with her by this time, grows jealous as the weeks pass. His efforts to locate Ann are fruitless.

She has found work as governess in the home of Mrs. Tracy, an artist. Vincent, Mrs. Tracy's brother, is attracted to Ann. Valeria, scheming to win Peter back, persuades him to hire Allan Vincent to decorate the home he bought for Ann. One night Ann goes with Allan to see a new home he has bought. She remains out of sight while Allan talks with Peter and Valeria.

Driving home, Peter takes Valeria in his arms. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY
PETER raised his head. He had kissed Valeria and found her kiss dust and ashes against his mouth. He said hoarsely, "Sorry, Val, for being a damn fool."

He started the car and drove recklessly, blindly, while Valeria felt the tide of humiliation wash over her. Peter had kissed her and then had turned away. He didn't want her kisses. If Peter had seen her eyes then he could not have missed the dangerous glow.

He left her at the door. Valeria did not urge him to come inside. She wanted him to go. Peter went to Allan Vincent next morning, offering to settle the whole transaction for whatever the decorator thought the completed job would have been worth. "I realize this is queer business," Peter said, "but I don't want to lose to it."

He came home early in the afternoon, shut himself in his studio and began working on plans for another house. This, too, was a "honeymoon house," as Allan termed it with disgust. Perhaps this romance, also, would blow up before many months had passed. Love! Rot.

As the afternoon wore on, Allan became conscious that the house seemed unusually quiet. Generally about this time, he could look out and see Ann and the children engaged in some form of activity. The sandbox dotted with bright buckets was within range of his vision. Almost any day he could step to the window and watch a race or a golf game with the miniature equipment he had given Sonny last Christmas. Sometimes Ann would be sitting on the great bench under the three with the children beside her.

She was so young, so eager and sweet. So utterly desirable. Today, the trio was not to be seen. Probably Lois had had one of her spells of emotionalism, when she repented of neglecting her children and was now playing the indulgent mother with a vengeance.

HE heard the car on the drive just then and a moment later the children racing through the house. There was a knock on the door. "Allan!" "Come in." Mrs. Tracy stood in the doorway, a worried look on her face. Sissy came, climbing into her arms. "Ann's gone," Sissy said. Allan said nothing. "Deliver me from temperamental persons, Allan!" Mrs. Tracy said petulantly. "At least from all temperamental persons except myself."

"Great heavens. Can't you get to the point?" "Ann gave up her job this morning, and asked me to drive her to town. I've spent all afternoon trying to get somebody else. Was it something you did?"

"Of course not. I'm in love with her. If that's what you mean." "You're in love with Ann?" "Why not?" "I'm only surprised. You told her?"

"About a week ago. I think I fell in love with her the first time I saw her." He was sure he had. He had wanted to touch Ann's hair, her lovely, clear skin. "I'm afraid the artist fell in love," Mrs. Tracy said slowly. "We artists love differently—and not constantly, Allan."

"If I had Ann I could get back my faith in things." "I'm afraid there's no hope." "Go ahead." "I think she's married." "Married?"

"Yes. I went to her door one night and opened it without knocking. She was sitting on the bed turning a little ring, a platinum wedding band, in her hand. When she saw me she closed her hand over it."

He gave a short, derisive laugh. "Married! Not such an innocent as I thought!"

After a moment he asked, "Where is she now?" "I left her at a place called the Evans House—quite inexpensive. She said she would stay there until she decides what to do. Don't bother her right now. She's terribly upset about something."

"I have a little pride. She didn't even say good-by." "She didn't want to go by your office."

Contract Bridge
Solution to Previous Contract Problem

Secretary American Bridge League

TWENTY-FOUR of the finest bridge teams in North America recently met in New York in the national championship tournament of the American Bridge League.

The team-of-four event is one type of competition in which the element of luck is practically eliminated. Two members of a team play the North-South hands, while the remaining two members play the East-West hands at another table. Here is a hand in which one team of experts made doubled game contract.

tricks played both directions of the board.
John Rau, one of the most brilliant of the younger experts, made a splendid showing in this year's tournament. Mr. Rau and his partner, Charles Lochridge, made their four heart contract on this hand without difficulty, losing only two spade tricks and one club trick.

EAST can hardly be blamed for his double considering his partner's bid of 4, and West was well satisfied with the freak distribution became apparent. When the other two members of Rau's team, Fred D. Kaplan, New York, and Samuel Katz, Newark, N. J., played the East-West hands, they went to five diamonds over South's four heart bid and North doubled.

South was the leader against the five-diamond contract and opened with the six of spades. East won with the ace and led a diamond, which was won by North with the ace.

North now switched to a club. East, went up with his ace and then cleared the trump suit. East now led the spade eight and won the trick in dummy with the king.

He then led the queen of spades and discarded his singleton heart. East conceded one club trick and this made his contract of five diamonds, doubled.

Of course, the contract could have been defeated with a heart opening and an immediate switch to clubs by North. But the defense is hard to figure from the bidding. As it happens, Mr. Rau's team would have had a good result on the board even if the five-diamond contract had been defeated. By making a game both ways, however, they accomplished one of those big swings which the experts seek in team-of-four play.
