

Two Players Use Mail for Chess Games

Neither Wilson Daily Nor Paul Britton Will Admit Defeat.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Times Woman's Page Editor

WILSON DAILY and Paul Britton completed their correspondence games of chess with each conceding the other a victory. While Mr. Britton was at Harvard University last year, they played two games via the mails, and if Mr. Britton's study of philosophy doesn't engross him too deeply, they possibly will start another game this fall.

They kept their chess boards set up in accordance with their next moves, sent them in the mail and then waited for the other's answer. When Mr. Britton returned from the summer vacation, they continued to play, and neither as yet will admit the other the champion. They continued their match still is a draw.

"We were as keenly interested in the correspondence game as we were in the ones we played at home," Mr. Daily said. Mr. Britton was so excited over one of his moves that he wrote a postscript on the card, "If you answer Thursday, it will get here Saturday and I'll have a reply to you Monday." Occasionally they annotated their moves to date to avoid any confusion.

Mr. Daily won his game by using the attack of Ruy Lopez, a Spanish monk of many years ago, who pondered over chess plays.

GIVEN TO HOBBIES

Different chess players have various hobbies. Some collect books on the subject; others old sets, but Mr. Daily derives the most pleasure from finishing his own sets. He buys unfinished men, shells and weights them. His favorite board is one that he made himself from a piece of maple veneer cut from a door panel. He scored and finished it in natural color and gave a black and white checkered pattern.

Mr. Daily had played the game several years ago and with his revived interest, he rummaged through the attic for his set. Certain pieces were missing; he visited shops and discovered that sets occasionally are broken. He picked up the odd pieces missing his set, and then finished them. He pondered over a simple means of weighting the pieces. Finally he schemed a solution. He drilled holes in the bottom of the pieces, filled them with carpenter's hot glue and poured in fine stream shot, and passed a piece of felt over the bottom.

His men have a glossy finish and are weighted so that they may be moved easily, but still are not knocked over by the brush of a coat sleeve or a slight gesture of the hand.

EGGS: AN ANTIQUITY

Like all chess players, Mr. Daily and Mr. Britton study the masters' attacks, counter attacks and defenses. The annotated games of masters provide knowledge of moves made under certain situations.

"You know, the true origin of chess is unknown, but it has been traced as far back as Indian antiquity. For the last five centuries no change has been made in the method of playing," Mr. Daily explained.

Every Saturday a group of chess players gather in Daniel Luten's office for an afternoon of play. Several men of many professions—lawyers, doctors, insurance men, engineers—play or watch others sit for hours in studying their attacks.

USE HAYMON ATTACK

Mr. Luten has his own special attack which he calls the Indiana Haymon. He uses it on the unwary in his first matches with them and uses it they are cautious, he defeats them. He has a number of variations in his attack, and sometimes he will overcome the strategy of an old timer.

Herbert Spencer, prosecuting attorney, has collected one of the largest chess libraries in the country. His hobby is to buy old and new books on the subject, and he subscribes to numerous chess bulletins and magazines. To him study of the masters' games is as exhilarating as to listen to a finished musical composition.

Mr. Daily also has an exquisitely hand-carved set from Florence, Italy, and a rubber board which may be rolled up and tucked into a traveling bag.

Guests of Miss Irma Drake at a bridge party this afternoon brought gifts to Miss Frances Lemaux, honor guest, and bride-to-be, Miss Lemaux is to be married to Donald R. Miller, Iowa City, Ia., on Oct. 24 in Tabernacle Presbyterian Church.
