HABITUAL CRIMINAL LAW IS SUSTAINED

State Supreme Court Denies Sammons' Appeal.

The Indiana habitual criminal law, providing that a life sentence may be given a person convicted of three felonies, was upheld by the Supreme Court yesterday in denial of the appeal of James (Fur) Sammons, notorious gunman and former Capone associate.

Sammons has spent 26 of his 50 years in prison and once barely cheated the electric chair in Illinois. Sentenced to life on the habitual criminal charge in Lake County, Sammons appealed on the grounds that the Lake prosecutor established only two of the four previous felony convictions with which he was charged when indicted for bribery.
