

CITY SCIENTIST FINDS WAY TO FIGHT POISON

Chen Counteracts Cyanide in System by Use of Three Drugs.

By Science Service
ST. LOUIS, Jan. 6.—An Indianapolis pharmacologist, Dr. K. K. Chen, of Eli Lilly & Co., and Dr. Theodore Koppányi of the Georgetown University Medical School, have developed methods of combating the effects of two poisons which cause many deaths each year through suicide or accident, it was announced to the medical scientists meeting with the American Association for the Advancement of Science here. The two poisons are the extremely deadly cyanide and the less deadly barbiturate sleeping powders, such as luminal and veronal, which nevertheless cost hundreds of lives when taken accidentally or wilfully. Picrotoxin is the drug that fights overdoses of the sleeping powders. Dr. Koppányi assisted Washington physicians in recalling from otherwise certain death persons who had taken overdoses of the powders with suicidal intent.

Uses Amyl Nitrate

Cyanide poisoning is combated by Dr. Chen with a mixture of amyl nitrate, sodium nitrite and sodium thiosulphate. This trio of drugs rapidly counteracts the deadly poisonous effects of the cyanide when administered by injection into the veins. Picrotoxin is a bitter-tasting white crystalline powder found in the famed fish berries of the East Indies, where it gets its name because the natives use it to poison fish. It is a powerful stimulant. Its former uses were almost invariably the wrong ones—epilepsy, St. Vitus' dance and conditions of convulsions.

INSANE WOMAN SUSPECTED OF DROWNING BABY

New York Hospital Parolee Leers at Anguish of Child's Parents.

By United Press
NEW YORK, Jan. 6.—A toothless, giggling woman, paroled three months ago from an insane asylum where she had been confined 20 years was held today under suspicion of drowning a 10-months-old infant.

The missing baby, Jacob Harowitz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Harowitz, was kidnapped in his perambulator yesterday from in front of an East Side tenement. More than 400 policemen and thousands of neighborhood residents searched the district last night.

While searchers dragged the East River and investigated vacant buildings and lots, Gussie Friedman, 45, laughed through leering lips at the moans of Jacob's mother and the tears of his father, and gibbered unintelligible answers to police questions.

Police believed Gussie pushed the Harowitz baby, asleep in a carriage gay with red and blue blankets, into the river.
Suspicion fastened on her because she had been found, less than an hour after little Jacob disappeared, wheeling another infant with frenzied speed toward the river. Four high school boys hunting Jacob stopped her less than a block from the water front. Gussie surrendered the child, Doris Maslin, 2, without a struggle.

"You can have the brat," she screamed, and then laughed.
