Churches Are to Repay Old Debt to Area

Federation to Study Means of Aiding Needy Congregations.

BY CLIVE M'GUIRE
Executive Secretary Indianapolis Baptist Association.

Indications that the churches of Indianapolis will sometime undertake to pay an ancient debt for service rendered by churches on the close-in South and West Side are pointed out by Dr. Ernest N. Evans, executive secretary of the Church Federation of Indianapolis.

Hanging on his office wall in the Y. M. C. A. building is the map prepared several years ago by the Indianapolis Community Plan Committee. They have marked in solid black the area in question. It covers census tracts 20, 22, 57, 58, 76, 77, 78 and 83 and reports a population of about 36,000.

On the map it looks like the two equal sides of a mammoth isosceles triangle with its apex at the corner of Missouri and Washington streets. It covers an area of about four square miles.

Prosperous Years Ago
A generation ago this district had churches that carried on as "profitably" as any in the city. It was a favorite section for middle-class householders who wanted to live within walking distance of the business district. Now the old churches are largely gone and only a few of the old householders remain.

The migration farther out that started about the turn of the century lured an army of well-trained leaders into the outlying churches, greatly to the enrichment of those churches but almost to the total undoing of the churches at the center from which the valuable gift of personnel was drawn. Some of the outstanding members on official boards of the strongest churches played with pride that they used to play in Military Park and around the South Side market.

Now Present Problem
These sections, in turn, have not fared well in the transition. They have suffered the fate of other close-in residence sections in other cities. They present today an outstanding home mission problem in Indianapolis.

Their population has increased; human needs have mounted to the sky; the churches that have been the backbone of the city for a century have been reduced to a few of the old saints who stoutly refused to let their "testimony" die. The time when the churches were sources were diminishing to the vanishing point these churches were faced with human problems many times over more difficult and more numerous than they had encountered in their more prosperous days.

Similar conferences are planned by Dr. Shriver for Frankfort, Jan. 21; Crawfordsville, Jan. 22; Bloomington, Jan. 23, and Terre Haute, Jan. 24.

Church Leader Calls for Life to Be Rebuilt

Bring Divine Principles Into Politics and Industry, Is His Plea.

Protestant ministers are advised to insist on the rebuilding of present day life on divine principles, to avoid modern "isms" and to bring the reign of Christ into politics and industry, by Dr. John McDowell of New York, secretary of the National Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

Speaking before an interdenominational conference of clergymen in Indianapolis this week, Dr. McDowell discussed "The Christian Minister and the Present Crisis."

In answer to the question, "Is it Christ or chaos for the world?" he said, in part: "The problems confronting us in the present crisis are well nigh insoluble. The materialism and economic are baffled."

Restoration Unwanted
"No attempt to restore the conditions of the past can be successful, or if successful, satisfactory. It is now clear to all thinking men that our social and economic life, our political, national and international life must be rebuilt from the bottom."

Commenting on the choice of Christianity or Christianity plus some modern "ism," Dr. McDowell said, "It is no part of the Christian minister's business to preach any of the modern 'isms,' nor is it his business to preach against them. He has another and larger message to deliver, and a more important work to do."

In answer to the question, "Is the Christian minister to be a spectator or a leader in the present crisis?" he declared that the minister no longer can remain a spectator of social evils or economic wrongs, nor accept with complacency anti-Christian theories and practices in politics, industry and national and world affairs.

Minister's Function
"It is not the function of the minister to prescribe economic and political programs. It is his function to bring the reign of Christ into all realms of human life; and surely the reign of Christ is not reconcilable with war or sweat shops or slums or economic oppressions or racial persecutions or selfish nationalism."

Dr. McDowell asserted that the time has come when, as Christians and as citizens, "we should look less to Washington and more to God and ourselves for the recovery we need and must have if democracy is to continue in America."

The Rev. Malcolm McNeal, Prentice Presbyterian Church pastor, is to conduct devotional broadcasts sponsored by the Church Federation of Indianapolis next week over radio station WIRE. His theme is to be "Strength for a Good Work."
