

Smith Dance Lets Guests Forget Cold

Spring Decorations Help Make Columbia Club Event a Success.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN

Smith College Alumnae helped their friends forget that the weather man had been accurate in his predictions for Saturday night. After they had ventured out into the young blizzard to attend the dance, they discovered that the hostesses had given the Columbia Club ballroom a breath of spring in the decorations.

Large clusters of spring flowers bloomed in the large urns stationed at the entrance to the ballroom. Large palms waved over the orchestra members. Some one had an ingenious idea that blue and white cellophane straws doubled up in a cluster would look as crisp and fresh as rain-splashed spring flowers, which they did.

Many of the gowns were as colorful as spring perennials. Two large bunches of white violets at the necklines of Miss Jeanne Disette's green taffeta frock reminded us of the violet-gathering days to come. We turned away from the frosted ballroom windows to think of spring days—particularly of that wild strip of land along White River, North Crow's Nest—when we glimpsed Mrs. Erwin Stout on the dance floor.

The Stouts are enjoying their first winter in their new home in North Crow's Nest. One can see their home high above the river as one drives along Meridian-st., north of Westfield-blvd. The trees screen the white brick house from view in the summer. Now stark and bare, their branches spread out against the whiteness of the bricks like some fantastic black network.

Mrs. Frank Hoke's green crepe gown was as devoid of frills as the tailored riding habits she wears so frequently when she rides her show horses. Purple velvet flowers were massed to form a collar, circling the neckline in front. Mrs. Hoke, the Smith Club president, and Mr. Hoke had dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ray Bunch and their guests. Mrs. Clayton Mogg was one of them. The pattern of her black lace gown formed diamond shaped designs. Several green bows were marshaled down the front of the tailored bodice.

A white silk cord gathered up the neckline of Miss Eunice Disette's black lace tunic. The short sleeves were slit open from their tight arm-bands to the shoulders. Mr. and Mrs. William C. Macomber braved the weather to come from their home in Kendallville to attend the dance in the Dutch treat party arranged by Mrs. Macomber's sister, Mrs. Morris Lanville Brown. Wine chiffon floated over the matching satin slip worn by Mrs. Macomber. She gathered up the flowing train as she danced.

The burnt orange moire of Miss Irving Moxley's gown was twisted into braids, for the shoulder straps and edging for the neckline. Mrs. Kirby Whyte's black gown glittered like twinkling stars in a black sky. Rhinestones were scattered carelessly over the tunic, occasionally clustering close together to achieve a brilliant effect.

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde A. Wands preluded the party with a dinner at their home. Messrs. and Mesdames Louis Harle, Paul E. Fisher, James Cunningham and Ralph Vonnegut, Dr. and Mrs. Cleon Nafe, Mrs. John Darlington and Paul Weir were their guests.

Miss Janet Noyes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Noyes, was a visitor at Cornell University this weekend for the university's first winter carnival since the World War. Miss Noyes has been studying at French School in New York since she made her debut here during the Christmas holidays.

Miss Noyes would be reveling in the sub-zero weather were she at home. She would be joining the parties which ice skate frequently on the pond at the Noyes' estate in Crow's Nest.

Three of Miss Noyes' Indianapolis friends also attended the carnival. Miss Anne Elliott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Elliott, left Wells College to enjoy the week-end at Cornell. Miss Jane Carter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Solon J. Carter, and Miss Katherine Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Porter, received week-ends of absence from Sweet Briar College to attend the carnival.

Case Gives 'Title' for School Job

Attendance Officer Can Tell Status as Soon as Door Opens.

BY ELIZABETH CARR

Sometimes she is a school attendance visitor. Sometimes she is a school attendance officer. And sometimes she is just a plain truant officer.

But the minute a Marion County home door is opened to her, Mrs. Elizabeth Tyre, county attendance officer, knows just what her title is to be.

The willful absence of children from school and the parents' willfulness in keeping their children out of school decreased one-half last semester (Sept. 1 to Jan. 15) from the preceding semester. There were about six willful truants last semester.

The problem confronting Mrs. Tyre today is the realization that the family problems and behavior problems both in and out of school almost have doubled. For the last semester a year ago there were 27, and for the semester just completed they numbered 38.

"If I had a school room for parents, I might work myself out of a job," Mrs. Tyre said.

"Our family problems," she continued, "have included making the parents realize the necessity for children attending school, hints on dressmaking, suggestions as to finances and even bringing families back together again after a separation. Most of the mothers seem to let loose and tell a woman many things they would not tell a man."

Always Get Second Chance

As for the informal cases, of which there are no court records, they always are given a second chance, according to the officer. Sometimes the juvenile court workers go out with Mrs. Tyre. When their efforts fail, some action then is taken.

One woman whose marital problems had been solved for her, thanked Mrs. Tyre. "You know, it took an outsider to see what was going on. Why, all we did was spit at each other."

"A great many of the parents don't realize the importance of their children attending school," said Mrs. Tyre. "They seem to think, 'I'll just keep him home to go to the grocery store.' In one school in Wayne township, one half of the eighth grade arrived at the school house late. Upon questioning the pupils I found one boy had made four trips to the grocery store before coming to school."

It was during that below-zero weather that one mother told Mrs. Tyre she "couldn't see any sense in sending her children to school."

Mrs. Tyre said, "What a fine situation would result if every one felt that way. If we're going to conduct school, all the pupils should be present to receive the benefits."

Found Family in Bed

At one home in a nearby township Mrs. Tyre found the mother and the four children still in bed at 8 in the morning.

"I made them get dressed, and I took the children to school," she said, with a hint of firmness in her voice.

Mrs. Tyre called upon one boy who had stayed at home because his shoe hurt his heel.

"But he didn't complain about his heel when I stopped by and brought him to school," she said.

"I used to take one talk with the parents of these pupils to make them realize the importance of regular attendance, but it is a rare case when they don't co-operate after they understand," Mrs. Tyre has found.

In her three years as attendance officer, Mrs. Tyre admits she has realized a youthful ambition to hold the position. In reply to one principal's remark: "I wouldn't have your job for a million dollars," Mrs. Tyre answered:

"In January Mrs. Tyre was elected president of the James Whitcomb Riley group of attendance officer, which includes officers in Boone, Hamilton, Hancock, Hendricks, Johnson, Morgan, Shelby and Marion counties and Indianapolis, Shelbyville and Greentfield.

She enjoys working with people. Prior to her social service work with Miss Hannah Noone she was connected with organization work. She is a Past Matron of Brightwood Chapter O. E. S. and a past president of the Harold C. McGraw Auxiliary, United Spanish War Veterans.

MY DAY

By Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt

WHITE HOUSE, Washington.—Admiral Spencer Wood, who first went to sea in a sailing boat, told me at luncheon today of his early days in the Navy. Before he was commissioned he spent four years at Annapolis and then two years at sea.

The admiral told me that life in those days was none too easy for the midshipmen. During the Spanish-American war, when he had charge of a gunboat, the only way the men could sleep was by lashing deck-chairs to gratings and then lashing themselves into the chairs. In that manner they got what rest they could.

It was too hot below decks and they were always on the move, with only two officers and 29 men on board.

My husband had a wonderful time showing him his naval pictures after lunch, and talking of the "old Navy."

Mr. Minnegerode, the curator of the Corcoran Art Gallery, told me yesterday that he had asked the President for a loan exhibition of some of his naval collection, and that the President had agreed to his taking over what he wished.

I am afraid that we are all going to feel that we are living in a denuded house, for when he lent some of his pictures this autumn, the gaping spaces on the walls made us feel that we had lost familiar faces. When they finally came back we felt as though we had recovered old friends.

I went for a walk this afternoon and as I was crossing Lafayette Square two young boys, both dressed for hiking in the snow, were looking at one of the statues there. The older one stopped me and said:

"Thank you for answering my Christmas letter. I am your neighbor. We live in the attic of that house diagonally across from the White House. We are German born, but we admire the President because we think he is for 'little people.' So I wanted to write you at Christmas time and was very happy to have your reply."

"We took some pictures today on your grounds and if they turn out well, we will send you a set. Some day we should like to take your photograph, but not here. Auf wiedersehen."

For this thoughtfulness I was grateful.
