

American Flags, Period Costumes Add Brilliance to Sunnyside Guild Ball

Annual Philanthropic George Washington Birthday Social Event Is Held in Indiana Ballroom.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN
Society Editor

FROM out of the past, Sunnyside Guild chose the setting for its George Washington ball last night at the Indiana ballroom. American flags fluttered from the balconies to emphasize the patriotic theme.

Child pages and pageants dressed as George and Martha Washington moved through the crowd of dancers with gardenia corsages for sale. Later they received the spotlight on the ballroom floor as they danced a minuet, the favorite dance step of Colonial days.

Mrs. Wayne Stone, dressed in Martha Washington costume, presided over the flower cart, massed with gardenia corsages.

Mrs. Edward V. Mitchell, who trained the children for their parts, attended in a black net gown, fluttering over taffeta. A ruff turned up around her neck and was caught in front by silver flowers. A rhinestone belt glittered at the waistline.

Mrs. Chantilla White, general chairman, moved about the ballroom to greet guests attending the guild's largest annual philanthropic project. A large red and gold gown glowed at the neckline of her aquamarine blue brocade gown, cut on princess lines. Pleats flared off on the shoulders in wings, and a large bow spread out at the point of the décolletage in back.

Mrs. Charles Seidensticker, president, attended in a flame-colored lace gown, which relied on its floral pattern for its beauty, a short cape was draped in cowl effect over the shoulders and the skirt was gathered into slight fullness in front.

Mrs. Hanning Sells Tickets

Shirred sleeves gave individuality to the jacket, worn over Mrs. William Hanning's orchid chiffon gown, with draped neckline. For several years Mrs. Hanning has sold tickets at the door at the Washington birthday ball.

A jade jewelry ensemble set off Mrs. Edward E. Petri's black velvet gown, flowing into a slight train. A green feather in her hair harmonized with her jewelry.

Mrs. Glenn J. Pell's gown followed the ball's Colonial theme. The skirt of turquoise blue moire swept the floor and fell over her shoulders in period fashion. Dubonnet flowers outlined the neckline.

Mrs. B. B. Pettit's midnight blue tulle gown had glints of silver, picked up by the light. Folds forming shoulder straps were drawn together in front by rhinestone clips.

Gown Lined With Satin

Skirt of Miss Mary Stewart Haines' black satin gown was squared off in front at the ankles, where the deep rose satin lining showed as she walked. In back the skirt dipped into a train. The rose satin fell in drapes around the low-shouldered back.

Miss Madeline Speers attended in a black velvet gown, with a bit of white lace circling the neckline.

Mrs. Wallace O. Lee's black gown had a band sparkling with rhinestones squaring off the neckline. The belt was similar. Mrs. Lee's daughter, Miss Mary Louise Lee, wore a pink lace gown, its waist length cape a froth of tiny ruffles.

MY DAY

By Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt

NEW YORK—Here I am back in New York, but this time not on a very cheerful errand.

Even if a loss in a friend's family is not your own personal loss, you can not help realizing what it means for them to lose a link which has been the center of a family chain.

Years ago I remember a friend saying to me that one of the hard things about growing older was the passing of what—to you—had been the older generation. Suddenly you were standing out in front with no one to fall back on to give you a sense of security. We all must meet this, however, and there is always the joy of welcoming new youth to wipe out sadness.

I went over and spent a while this morning with my new grandbaby and her mother. Is there anything more exquisite than the softness of a wee baby's skin?

Unfortunately her little sister Sarah has had a cold, and so has not been able to see the new baby. I stopped and bought Sarah a toy and went to tell her that I had seen mummy and little Kate. Sarah said, "I have heard about my sister but I haven't seen her yet."

I wonder when she does if there won't be just a little bit of jealousy, for the newest one always occupies the center of the stage for a time at last.

This was a very family day—for my daughter and I had lunch together and soon found ourselves discussing many personal things.

Alerding-Winzenread Wedding to Be Followed by Reception

Misses Kathryn Feeney and Theresa Winzenread, the bridegroom's sister, were bridesmaids. Miss Feeney's moire gown was yellow and her hat and slippers green.

Miss Winzenread wore a green moire gown with yellow hat and slippers. Both carried yellow souvenir roses.

Miss Joan Swift, the bride's niece, as junior bridesmaid, wore a long pink taffeta dress with matching bonnet and carried a colonial bouquet.
