

INDIANA'S LATEST FILM MARKS ADVANCE IN TECHNICOLOR

Tints Enhance Attraction Showing Blue Ridge Folk; Atmosphere Is Pleasing

'Trail of Lonesome Pine' Opens Today; Plot Doesn't Follow John R. Fox Jr.'s Book Closely, but Resulting Movie Is Satisfactory to Fans.

Walter Wanger could not have chosen more wisely in the matter of a locale for his first all-color outdoor picture, "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," which opens at the Indiana today.

Like a series of breath-taking water color paintings, trees, hills, rocks, lakes, cloud formations, come to life in lovely natural colors, with no attempt made to force their beauty on the viewer.

The story, which does not follow very closely John Fox Jr.'s tale, opens with the arrival of Jack Hale (Fred MacMurray), boss of a railroad construction company, in the Blue Ridge country.

The feudists—the Tollivers and the Falins—resent his intrusion. By caring for his gun wound, Hale saves Dave Tolliver's (Henry Fonda) life and June (Sylvia Sidney) Dave's cousin, falls in love with the handsome engineer.

Hale makes friends with little Buddie Tolliver (Spanky MacFarland) and June brings him to see the engineer daily. She becomes a pest at the camp and Hale tells her so. When she flares up, he advises her to go to Gaptown to school. She does.

Clans Turn on Hale
Dave, recovered from his wound, starts for Gaptown to get Hale and bring back his cousin, whom he loves. He meets Buck Falin (Robert Barrat) and his crew. A fight ensues in which Hale and Dave are beaten up by the Falins. After the fight both clans turn against Hale. The construction camp is burned. The steam shovel is blown up and Buddie is killed.

Hale had sent June to his sister in Louisville, but when she hears of her brother's death she comes back, embittered against the engineer. She promises to marry Dave when he has avenged Buddie's death.

At the Falin cabin, Dave finds old Buck Falin in remorse over the feud results. They shake hands. But when Dave leaves, Wade, one of the Falin clan, shoots him in the back. Old man Falin then kills his own son. He carries Dave to the Tolliver house, where the family battles are ended with a knowing hand grasp from Judd Tolliver (Fred Stone).

Peace Comes to Hills
Dying, Dave tells the family he tripped over his gun and shot himself. Hale and June are united and peace reigns on the trail.

Model to Make Debut
Elizabeth Russell, New York commercial artists model, will make her film debut in the feminine lead of "Murder With Pictures."

Marsha Hunt Aids Father
Marsha Hunt flew to New York to help coach her father in his first amateur acting attempt. He is a prominent New York attorney.

Confused Over Races
Before the play is over there is a grand confusion of horse races, a weeping wife and a storming greeting card company president. In the end, the gamblers win thousands and Erwin gets a new office with a big raise in pay. What's important to him, he gets his Mother's Day verses, 600 of them, in on time.

Three Men on a Horse
Erwin is as funny as ever. Sheldon Leonard swaggers excellently in the role of Patsy. Other roles are carried along in the raucous spirit of the play. Last night's audience warmed up to it and were roaring at the final curtain.

A mite off color at times, always excitingly humorous, "Three Men on a Horse" is competition for almost any comedy we've seen.

The play is to be presented to night, tomorrow afternoon and night.
