BEHIND THE SCENES

Toby Ryan, 19, is a photographic model, posing for photographs to be used in advertisements. Unknown at first, she is soon in high demand in the studios, particularly after she is chosen as "The Soap Girl."

Toby shares an apartment with HARRIET HOLM, another model, engaged to marry Clyde Sabin, whom Toby distrusts.

After weeks of silence, Tim telephones, but Toby makes an excuse for not seeing him.

Jay Hillier, president of the Hillier company, comes to the studio while Toby is posing for some photographs. Later she goes to dinner with him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

TOBY went with Jay Hillier to see "Here Comes the Queen." The play was gay and amusing and brilliantly staged. The star was a radiant and graceful dancer—a dynamic little creature who looked scarcely older than Toby herself.

She sang almost as well as she danced and her costumes were dazzlingly lovely.

Toby said, over her shoulder to Hillier, "She's beautiful, isn't she?" He agreed. Toby, intent on the scene behind the footlights, was not aware that Hillier's eyes were on her more often than they were on the stage.

She went to dinner with him twice in the week that followed and to a concert. On Sunday they drove to a famous inn across the Hudson. Toby enjoyed that, too. She hadn't realized that spring had actually arrived. Trees were spreading their leaves and fields were deep green.

The sunshine was warm and yellow.

She said, "It must be wonderful to live in the country."

"Would you like that?"

"More than anything I can imagine. Think of looking at trees like those" (Toby swept one arm in a wide gesture toward a picturesque group at the right) "and think of being where you can really see the sky and walk on grass with no 'Keep Off' signs. And being able to see things grunting and maybe plant them. I'd have a garden if I lived in the country. And I'd have a dog—no, two of them. And all day long I'd stay out in the sunshine."

Hillier laughed. "You make it sound attractive," he said, "yet I imagine there are hundreds of girls who have all those things who would be glad to change places with you."

"Then they'd be making a mistake."

"I have a country place," Hillier's tone was sober. "It's in Connecticut. I don't seem to be able to spend much time there."

In New York, she knew, he lived at a hotel. A very elegant hotel where everything he could possibly want was supplied him.

"I should think you'd like being in the country," Toby told him.

"I might, if there were some one there to make it seem like home. Most of the time it doesn't seem worth the bother to make the trip out there. Getting old, I guess—"

HILLIER had often made references to his age. He did it jokingly, yet Toby felt that the fact that the years were creeping on disturbed him. She didn't know how old he was. At first she had thought of him as definitely middle-aged, but now that she knew him better he seemed younger. He was leanly built, athletic. She knew he liked sports, though he seemed to have little time for them. He might be 40 or he might be closer to 50. That, of course, was old to Toby.

It was a day or so after that drive into the country that Harriet found Len Logan's column in the evening newspaper and showed it to Toby. The columnist had written: "What soap manufacturer whose initials are J. H. is being seen about the hot spots these spring evenings with the oh-so-pretty young thing whose picture appears in the soap advertisements? Although the report has been denied, friends hint that the couple will middle-aise it within a few weeks."

HARRIET put down the newspaper with a flourish. "Well," she said, "what about it?"

"What about what?"

"It's easy enough to know who Logan means. What about it? If there's going to be a wedding I'd like to know about it."

Toby took the newspaper and read it for herself. "Oh!" she said, "why do they print such things! It's dreadful—they haven't any right!"

"Maybe not, but what I want to know is, is it true?"

"Of course it's not true—that is, if you think it's about—"

"But Toby did worry. Others read Len Logan's paragraph and spoke about it. There were jibes at the studios and at the Model League office, and since Toby was so plainly embarrassed, her denials were accepted as proving the rumor.

SHE had a dinner engagement with Hillier which she almost broke. At the last minute she decided to go through with it. She would have to see him some time, she thought, and might as well have it over with.

She was relieved that he said nothing about the gossip column. They went to the restaurant where he had taken her the first night they had dined together. It was a favorite of his, and Toby liked it, too.

Hillier talked of events in the days of his news. He had an amusing story to tell and asked about how she had spent the day.

"He doesn't read Len Logan's column," Toby decided. "Or at least he didn't see that one."

And then Hillier surprised her. The waiter took away the soup plates and brought fresh ones. Hillier looked up and said, "Sylvester—"

"Yes, Mr. Hillier?"

"Would you say this was a 'hot spot'?"

The waiter hesitated an instant, the gravity of his face unchanging. Then he said, "No, sir."

HILLIER leaned back in his chair. "Neither would I," he said.

If that was a reference to Len Logan's paragraph, it was the only one Jay Hillier made.

The gossip columnist seemed less important after that, and Toby decided to forget his barbs. When any one said anything about the reported romance, she laughed and was surprised to find that this attitude seemed to discourage questioners.

She had more time with Harriet these days. Clyde Sabin was away on another trip.

"Maybe," Harriet said, "the next time he goes, I'll go with him."

"What was buying her trousseau and insisted that Toby must accompany her on many of the shopping trips. Harriet was a shrewd shopper, but now she wanted advice. Gowns were selected and sent home, only to be returned. She couldn't decide between the blue negligee and the yellow one. And what about shoes? Did the ones with the buckles or the straps look best?

Would Clyde like the red and white sport dress or the green one? Was it true that men admired big black pictures hats more than any other kind, and if she bought that one at Yvonne's how could she pack it?

TOBY heard these questions and others again and again. She answered as well as she could and she tried to be enthusiastic when Harriet talked of Clyde and their plans.

That was the hardest. Toby still distrusted Clyde Sabin. She hated to think Harriet was going to marry him, and there wasn't a thing in the world that she could do about it. She couldn't tell Harriet, don't think you should marry Clyde, because he tried to make a date with me."

No, she couldn't do that. She couldn't do anything at all except help choose the dresses and hats and shoes Harriet was to wear on her honeymoon and hope that her fears might prove unfounded.

Toby was going to keep the apartment. She was earning enough now so that she could afford it. The furniture was Harriet's, but she wanted Toby to keep that, too.

"We'll be living in a hotel," Harriet said, "at least for a while. I'd rather go with Clyde when he's away on trips than stay here alone, so an apartment would be a nuisance. After while we'll have a place of our own, but in the meantime, I'd like to have you keep my things."

TOBY agreed. It would be lonely some without Harriet and she was glad she could stay in the same cheerful surroundings.

She had promised to go with Harriet to look at some hats one afternoon, but first she had an appointment at the beauty shop.

"I'll meet you at a quarter of 4," Toby said. "At the — street entrance of the store."

"All right, I'll be there."

Toby hurried away. She finished at the beauty shop and went on to the store. Harriet was not in sight when she arrived there.

"She'll probably come in a few minutes," Toby told herself, and strolled on to look at a shop window.

The window proved uninteresting. Toby turned away a moment later and noticed a man coming toward her. He was of medium height and he wore a rather shabby suit and a dark hat. Toby had seen him somewhere. She tried to think where, but couldn't remember. The next instant he was beside her.

The man stopped. "So I've found you again!" he said. "This time you're coming with me!"

NEW AUTO SALES FOR MONTH TOTAL 300,000

Highest for Any March in History, Except 1929, Is Estimate.

By United Press

DETROIT, April 13.—New passenger car sales in the United States during the month of March will total 300,000 units, R. L. Polk & Co. estimated today.

The new estimate is the highest total for March in history, with the exception of 1929, when a total of 377,802 units was recorded.

Truck and commercial cars for the same month will reach a total of 52,000 units, Polk estimated. This figure has been topped only four times in history for any month of the year and far exceeds any previous March figure.

The estimates are based on official registrations received from 13 States.

COPS ARE ASSESSED FOR STOLEN CAMERA

Legal Department Puzzled
by Court Ruling.

The city legal department today puzzled over a ruling by Municipal Judge Wilfred Bradshaw whereby the police department would be assessed costs for possessing a stolen camera.

The camera was stolen from Richard R. Keeney and recovered by police in a pawn shop. Mr. Keeney filed a replevin action against Alvy Reeves, police property room head.

When neither Mr. Keeney nor police put up a bond, the sheriff's office agreed that the property room could hold the camera pending court decision.

Judge Bradshaw found for Mr. Keeney and ordered police to pay the costs. By that time the worry and bookkeeping over the camera was so involved that the whole matter was turned over to the city legal department.
