Italy's Victorious Army
Arrives at Addis Ababa

Bandits Flee as Troops
Take Positions; U. S.
Legation Abandoned.

Italians was accompanied by 15,000 African Askaris who had been encamped on the heights dominating Addis Ababa for the last 48 hours.

The Italians took up their positions in the center of town and the natives, including bandits and looters, stampeded out of the city. Some tried unsuccessfully to take refuge in the legation compounds, which they have been attacking.

Barton flashed word earlier today that the American legation had been evacuated, and its besieged garrison removed to the safety of the fortified British legation compound.

A detachment of his tough Sikh troops were defending the Belgian legation after repelling two fierce attacks on it, he reported.

"United States legation safely evacuated this morning," Barton radioed the foreign office.

From the seven words of his message, the foreign office read that Cornelius Van H. Engert, American minister, his wife, his crew of four Navy wireless men, his little staff, and a handful of refugees had left the legation with flying colors, the legation documents and valuables safe.

For four days they had stood siege by drunken, enraged warriors in the city's most dangerous quarter, hoping until the last that the long-delayed Italian column would arrive.

The American legation was evacuated only when Engert felt it absolutely necessary. He sent women and children, except his wife, to the British legation Sunday night, but remained with the men.

An unconfirmed report said the Japanese legation also had been attacked.

Bingham Calls Washington

To the last Mr. Engert resisted the almost flat orders of Secretary Cordell Hull to abandon the United States legation, pleading that he could hold out.

But today, the fifth day on which the Italian entry had been expected, it was indicated that Engert believed he was no longer justified in risking the lives of those with him.

He had a few ill-assorted weapons and a small supply of ammunition to withstand the attacks of bandits.

Almost at the same time that the Foreign Office received Barton's dispatch, Paul Bodard, French Minister at Addis Ababa, advised the Quai D'Orsay that Ras Hailu, Governor of Gojjam Province, arrived in Addis Ababa last night and gave battle to the bandits still roaming the streets.

He had only 150 men, Bodard reported, but they were well disciplined and, fighting the bandits in organized manner, arrested hundreds of them and relieved pressure on the legations.

PARIS, May 5.—Ethiopia's hope for justice lies in the government of the United States, Wolde Mariam, Ethiopian delegate to the League of Nations and ranking diplomatist in Europe, said today.

Sadly, he spoke of the Emperor's flight, of the desertion of League nations, and of the use by Italians of poison gas.

"But one action has thrown a thin ray of light across this dark horizon," he continued. "It is this—Cordell Hull, Secretary of the United States, was the first foreign

PARIS SENDS TROOPS
TO FALLEN CAPITAL

Soldiers Ordered to Guard
Subjects, Property.

By United Press

PARIS, May 5.—The French government ordered troops into Addis Ababa today to protect French subjects and property.

On the urgent appeal of Paul Bodard, French minister at Addis Ababa, two companies of French colonial troops were sent from Djibouti to Dire-dawa, about halfway to the capital along the railway, with instructions to continue to Addis Ababa.

A third company already at Dire-dawa also will go to Addis Ababa. The troops will guard French warehouses and railway buildings. They also will take food supplies for the French legation, where a shortage has begun to be felt.

Bodard advised the French government that Ras Hailu, provincial governor, had arrived at Addis Ababa with 150 men and after a fierce fight, quelled the roving bandits who were slaughtering in the streets.

The Linberry Pharmacy, 2102 E. 10th-st., received a phone request last night for a pint of whisky to be delivered to an apartment on Middle-dr, Woodruff Place.

"And send change for $10," added the customer.

Messenger Richard Wells, 16, of 547 N. Hamilton-av, was dispatched with one pint of whisky, value $1.04, and $8.96 in change.

He was greeted at his destination by a bare arm thrust through the partly open door. A voice said:

"Just give me the whisky and the change and I'll get you the ten-dollar bill. You can't come in because I am taking a bath."

Young Wells did so and waited more or less patiently. He finally called police. They decided to identify the arm. They found the apartment vacant and the rear door open.

ALBERT EDWARD WIGGAM

Albert Edward Wiggam, D. Sc., distinguished scientist, extends this invitation to you.

And Mr. Wiggam may start the game with this:

"Since a daughter often resembles her father can you explain why she doesn't inherit his big feet?"

Well, now, that is a question, isn't it? But maybe you may not be sure of the answer and while you are thinking about it suppose Dr. Wiggam asks this:

"Is it safer for the heredity of the children for a girl to marry the good son from a bad family than it is to marry the bad son from a good family?"

My, oh my! Not so easy is it? But imagine what interesting
