

STRICTER RULES TO BE ORDERED AT INFIRMARY

Grand Jury's Suggestions
Prompts Commissioners to Action.

John Newhouse, Marion County Commissioners president, said today that improvement in discipline of inmates at the Marion County Infirmary is being made. The board also is making improvements in buildings, he said.

The last Marion County Grand Jury, in its final report, cited the need for more rigid discipline at the county home. The Grand Jury also cited the need for painting structures on the farm.

"We've fired one employee for drunkenness, and discipline is to be improved some, but of course, we can not regulate inmates as is done in some institutions," Mr. Newhouse said.

The Grand Jury suggested that inmates be governed as to the hours of returning from leaves of absence. The jury declared inmates returned to the infirmary at all hours.

"I hardly see how we're going to regulate them completely," Mr. Newhouse declared.

Buildings to Get Paint

Clarence I. Wheatley, commissioner, said $100 is being spent for painting structures at the infirmary.

The Grand Jury also requested the establishment of an occupational therapy division, at Julietta, the Marion County Hospital for the Insane.

The commissioners said no occupational therapy department is anticipated in the new 1937 budget.

Over 1935 Figure.

Total collections in the state for 1936 were $87,849,538.78 in 1936, as compared to $74,005,377.98 in 1935. Corporation tax payments increased from $7,642,141.99 in 1935 to $10,874,935.91 in 1936. Individual income taxes were $6,207,239.61 in 1935 and rose to $8,520,874.51 in 1936. Grasshoppers Run Wild Over Middle Western States Because Warnings Issued by U. S. Scientific Experts Went Unheeded

Ruin of Farmer's Fields
Foreseen as Poison
War Starts Late.

BY DR. FRANK THONE
Science Service Writer

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Grasshoppers again! As if Uncle Sam didn't have his hands full already, in this summer of grace 1936, what with politics, drought, and heat waves. But the hoppers are here, and what are you going to do about it?

Governments scientists knew they were coming, and last fall warned the state governments—which did nothing. Now, with inadequate funds, and those supplied after the eleventh hour by a hastily adjourning Congress, Federal-aided control agencies are doing what they can.

The heaviest infestation is in the trans-Missouri country, where prairies merge into the plains. From a few counties in northern Oklahoma and practically all of Kansas, the empire of the hoppers spreads in a widening wedge up through the western Dakotas and all except the high mountainous parts of Montana, to the Canadian border and beyond. Island infestations also occur in the sage-land and irrigated regions of New Mexico, Utah, and Nevada, and over all except the southern part of Michigan. But the big battle rages in the wheat belt, with a loop running out into western Iowa's cornlands.

"Hoppers Are Locusts"
Grasshoppers are the American equivalent of the Biblical plague of locusts that smote Egypt. In fact, grasshoppers are locusts. The outbreak of shrilling 17-year "locusts" that made life interesting weeks ago have no proper claim on the name, but the swarming grasshoppers of the west are ecologically first cousins of the longer-winged flying hordes that darken the skies in warmer lands.

Like locusts, our grasshoppers will eat anything they can bite off—and they can bite off surprising things when they have stripped the fields and orchards of every green thing and are still starving. How did the scientists know that the grasshoppers would probably be bad this year? Easily enough. They went out into the fields last fall, and looked at the eggs that last summer's crop of female hoppers had laid just under the soil surface. There were an unusual abundance of them, and even the severity of last winter's weather did not avail to kill many of them off.

As a matter of fact, cold seldom has much effect on grasshopper eggs. The vulnerable part of their life cycle comes in late spring, when the new-hatched young ones are crawling about on the ground. Wet, chill weather then will swamp them, and also encourage the growth of fungous diseases that kill them off by millions.

Spring Favorable
But this spring in the West was warm and droughty, just the kind of thing young grasshoppers thrive on. The wingless young "nymphs" in their somewhat homely (technical name) went through four successive skin-sheddings, or "in-stars," unharmed by either weather or by the Borgia feasts of poisoned bran-and-molasses which the scientists begged for but couldn't get in time.

So now we have grasshopper boarders on our hands. For want of a few hundred thousand dollars this spring we may have to pay millions extra for our bread next winter.

IRRIGATION FOR MARION COUNTY FARM IS TRIED

Corn Crop May Be Saved if Experiment Works,
Agent Says.

Plagued by drought Marion County farmers today began experimenting with irrigating for their dry cornlands. The work is under the direction of Horace E. Abbott, county agricultural agent.

Croplands of Russell Hutchinson, Franklin Township, one mile south-east of Acton, are being used for experimental purposes.

Mr. Hutchinson has a creek that flows within a few hundred yards of 40 acres of corn. The corn now is green and viable, but may mature early, making only "nubbins" ears.

Aided by County Agent Abbott, the farmer intends to run pipe from the creek to the 40 acres of corn land. Two engines, borrowed from the Acton cannery factory, are to be used to pump the water.

Use May Be Popular

If the experiment proves successful, other corn land on the farm also may be irrigated, Mr. Abbott said.

The one difficulty encountered by the county agent and the farmer was obtaining sufficient two and one-half inch pipe to run the irrigating system, three-fourths of a mile over the crop land.

There are many farms in the county that could use similar irrigating systems, thereby saving their crops in dry weather," the county agent said.

One of the newer uses of rubber is to make seat cushions by dipping curly hair into latex, the milk of the rubber tree.
