

NEW DEAL AIDS GATHER TO MAP ELECTION DRIVE

Roosevelt Hyde Park Home
Scene of Conference on Strategy.

BY FREDERICK A. STORM
United Press White House Correspondent

HYDE PARK, N. Y., Aug. 3.—President Roosevelt called almost the whole general staff of the New Deal into conference today to prepare for the big Democratic "push" toward four more years of power. The President will begin next week a series of nearly overlapping tours that will keep him in action until early September and carry him through New England, west to the Dakotas, and possibly south to Mississippi or Tennessee.

In preparation, he took full personal command today of the forces that will back his fight for re-election. Strategy experts, from Postmaster General James A. Farley down, gathered with him for the big conference in his home over the Hudson.

To be discussed were party finances, political problems created by the drought, broad policies of defense against Republican criticisms of the New Deal, party organization, and publicity. Under the latter head probably will come discussion of the places and dates for the President's own campaign speeches.

Mr. Roosevelt will speak often on his tours, but the trips primarily are to acquaint him with flood control problems in New England and the Mississippi Valley, and the drought situation in the Northwest. Hence his addresses this month will be informal. He probably will make his first major speech in September, as he did in 1932.

Wallace, Davis on Hand

Among the conferees today, to acquaint the President with drought problems, and possibly political problems, of the Northern Midwest, were Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace and Chester Davis, former AAA administrator, now representative of agriculture in the Federal Reserve System.

To report the state of party finances were Mr. Farley, national executive committee chairman; Frank Walker, chairman of the party finance committee, and W. Forbes Morgan, party treasurer. Mr. Farley said recently that $2,000,000 would finance the campaign; he plans; Mr. Morgan reported last week that he had nearly $500,000 in cash, at a date when in 1932 the party had a deficit; Mr. Walker has said that contributions are coming unsolicited to his office.

Others were Charles Michelson, publicity director for the Democratic National Committee; Mary Dewson of the committee's women's division; Stephen T. Early, White House secretary; Stanley High, former church periodical editor who is organizing a pro-Roosevelt "Good Neighbor League"; Lawrence L. Robert Jr., another secretary.

Mr. Roosevelt disclosed his concern over the drought situation by receiving Mr. Wallace and Mr. Early head of the others. Both came from Washington laden with documentary reports.

The President will have only a week of rest here before he begins translating the decisions of today into action. His calendar will be almost constantly full from the time he goes to Washington Saturday until the polls close Nov. 5.

He will visit southern New York, Connecticut, western and northern Pennsylvania and possibly West Virginia and Eastern Ohio in the next two weeks.

LAFAYETTE, Ind., Aug. 3.—Purdue University's 208-acre airport this month is to become the home port of Miss Amelia Earhart's 210-mile-an-hour flying laboratory.

The plane was purchased through Purdue where she is a consultant in aeronautics. It is a twin-motored, all metal monoplane normally equipped to carry 10 passengers and two pilots.

Passenger seats, however, have been replaced by extra fuselage tanks that will carry 1250 gallons of gasoline, giving a cruising range of 4500 miles, a cruising speed of 180 miles and top speed of 210 miles.

What Miss Earhart intends to study are the human aspects of flight, among them diet, the effect of altitude on fatigue, the effect of altitude on users of alcohol, and eyestrain.

Complete new equipment and new navigation methods are also to receive the woman's attention.

When the university arranged for purchase of the plane and its sole ownership by Miss Earhart, it established the Amelia Earhart Fund for Aeronautical Research. All funds that may accrue from researches with the plane are to go to this fund.

Toward the end of the year, she plans a foreign flight, probably to South America.

FEARS SPANISH WAR MAY IMPERIL EUROPE

Missionary Leader Hints at Danger in Address Here.

Dr. James A. Caine, United Christian Missionary Society secretary, asserted in an address in the Lincoln Hotel last night that the Spanish revolt may cause a European war and threaten the neutrality of the United States.

He spoke at a meeting sponsored by the American League Against War and Fascism in observance of International Anti-War Day.

"Italy is believed to be supplying the Spanish rebels with arms and Great Britain probably will intervene on the side of the Spanish government," he said. "War between Great Britain and Italy would draw the allies into conflict."

for Allbritton and Thurber finished their struggle for secondary positions.

At the Nazi dictator intended to receive the medals came as a surprise and was not known until a German girl, Tilly Fleischer, a buxom red-cheeked fraulein, won the javelin throw. She and two other women who had placed in the event were escorted to Hitler's box. The dictator shook hands warmly with the young women and Goering patted them on the shoulders.

The ceremony was repeated, at least as to handshaking, when the Nazis swept the boards in the 10,000 meters, and again when two German men and a Finn accounted for the three places in the shot put. At this stage the boys in the press box began to speculate what Der Fuehrer might do if and when the American Negroes won. They weren't long in finding out. Still, considering one thing and another, maybe Messrs. Johnson and Allbritton got a break at that.

Even in face of what happened yesterday the formalities still remained distinct, moving and terrifying in memory. For sheer pageantry, the Nazis put on a show that has never been equaled in modern times. It had everything, color, dimensions, drama and pure unsullied hokum. The vast gathering in the stadium, the waving of flags, the shouting, the marching in national dress, looking like something grand, easily the most beautiful stadium in the world, bubbled to the top rim with humans. The athletic teams marching in national dress presented something only seen at an Olympic.

In intervals during the afternoon a complete symphony orchestra distilled sonorous music and a choir of one thousand voices sang with full-throated lustiness.

There were so many obvious touches of the theater, yet some of them somehow were strangely unobtrusive. Even the hard-bitten veterans of the press box experienced shivers of wariness when the white clad runner appeared through the gray misting with the Olympic torch on the last leg of the relay that had started in Olympia, Greece, days before.

The reaction to the wizen old marathon runner who had fetched a mess of olive sprigs to Hitler was considerably less poignant. It smacked to the music of professional showmanship. It was something Tex Rickard or Mike Jacobs might have done. They had the old gaffer all dressed up like an advertisement for a gypsy team.

He had won the first marathon in 1896 and it was plain that he was bewildered and puzzled by the attention he was receiving.

Near the close of the formalities an incredible number of doves symbolic of peace were released from coops on the stadium floor. Simultaneously, a cannon somewhere began to boom. "This was a grim sort of symbolism. It was as though Mars were mocking the carefully staged pretensions to brotherly love. At this instant a sordid imagination might have seen, not a gorgeous spectacle, but a tremendous powder keg draped in flags.

As a matter of fact the formalities projected two pictures distinctly different in meaning and effect. One was athletic and the other was political. The athletic one was thorough and inspiring. The political one was sinister, challenging and disheartening. At the end of the day you got the feeling that this was not so much a reception to athletes of the world, as an examination into the political attitude of the countries they were representing.

This examination was conducted by the people in the stands, their minds as to national affairs securely grooved by the Nazi press. Thus, when a marching athlete unit made a restful pause, resembling the Nazi salute in passing Hitler's box, the applause was deafening.

At all other times it was decorous, polite.

The French gave the Olympic salute, the right arm extended straight out to the side and the John Gadd, 62-year-old farmer accused of slaying his step-son, Russell Fortune, 27, Dayton, O., was bound over to the Marion County grand jury on charges of murder to-day and remanded to jail without bond by Judge Pro Tem. David M. Lewis.

The farmer appeared tired and dismayed as he came before Judge Lewis in Municipal Court today. His sparse grey hair was combed back in pompadour fashion and a two-day growth of beard was on his face. He said an alleged statement made to detectives was true and then mumbled, "It's a shame the way that boy treated me," as he was led back to jail.

Fortune was shot Friday night when he and his mother returned home from a neighboring meeting. He died in City Hospital Saturday.

Gadd was said to have told arresting officers that he shot the youth "to make him stop drinking."

stands boiled with enthusiasm. It would have been pleasant to reflect that this presented a closer bond between the two ancient enemies, but the French made it known in the evening that the salute was the same that they had used in all past Olympics.

The stands again rocked with cheers when the Austrians, whom Hitler lately entered into what is technically known as a peace pact, hailed their Fuehrer with an unmistakable Nazi salute.

This was interpreted to mean that the "incident Dolfus" was forgotten by all and sundry. The cheering rose to new heights when the Bulgarians went into an exaggerated goose-step, which reminded American observers of the old Roxyettes executing the routine of a dance number.

This was the spirit of the day. Any gesture seeming to reflect Nazi approval evoked wild demonstrations. The Americans did not salute in what was deemed the proper manner and were only mildly received. They marched past the dictator's box with their straw hats held over their heads. That they did not dip the flag either, provoked an added coldness. It is not generally known abroad that the flag is dipped only to the President of the United States. All the Nazis knew was what they saw, and they saw every flag dip to the German national anthem but the Stars and Stripes.

When the Olympics reach a point where they become a yardstick to measure nationalistic feelings they are a menace to good will rather than a stimulus. Where so much emphasis is placed on gestures, salutes and symbols, athletes are reduced to pawns in an ugly game of political chess. This may be inevitable in a chaotic age, but it is not comforting thought.

O.A.R.P. Founder, Gov. Landon

May Confer at Topeka Today

Townsend Scheduled for Address on Pension Plan at Kansas Capital; G. O. P. Advisers to Report.

BY JOE ALEX MORRIS
United Press Staff Correspondent

TOPEKA, Kas., Aug. 3.—Five men of political or national prominence invaded Gov. Alf Landon's capital today on pilgrimages of significance in the presidential campaign.

Greatest interest centered around Dr. Francis E. Townsend, who will preach his old-age pension plan to an audience at the City Auditorium and who may visit the Republican nominee at the Capitol a few blocks away.

Others on the Governor's calling list on the eve of the Kansas primary included:

Louis J. Tabor, National Grange president, who will discuss drought relief and crop insurance with Landon. Mr. Tabor has made a survey of 30 states, testing political sentiment but chiefly interested in the problems of farmers affected by the nonpartisan organization he heads.

Senator John G. Townsend of Delaware, Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee chairman, who will report progress of his organization work by his group, especially in the Midwestern states where he has been talking with candidates in the last few days.

Senator Frederick Stetler of Oregon, senatorial committee vice chairman, who will have charge of the organization west of the Mississippi River and who will discuss the Western situation with Landon. The Republican campaign will center in the bloc of agricultural states ranging westward from Ohio, it was understood, in the belief that the farm belt vote will be the deciding factor in the election.

Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., Republican senatorial candidate in Massachusetts, who will discuss with Landon recent developments in the Eastern states where the presidential nominee will make his first speaking tour late in August.

In addition to these visitors, the Kansas Governor will be busy with affairs in his own state including drought relief and the Tuesday primary which is not expected to be of special political significance because of lack of heated party contests.

Continuing his state relief program, Mr. Landon will discuss the drought situation on the radio this afternoon. He already has ordered representatives to a conference with railroad executives in Chicago in an effort to complete arrangements for reduced emergency freight rates for livestock, feed and water.
